Britain Vaunts Power

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 27.—Great Britain and France today welded new political and military weapons for any possible test of strength with the Rome-Berlin axis arising from insurgent successes in Spain.

Britain named a new director of mobilization who will map a complete program for calling land, sea and air forces into action if necessary. The nature and extent of his duties remained an official secret.

The French cabinet had before it proposals to summon additional army reservists and increase the length of military service.

Move to Absorb Tunis

France also has taken the first step toward absorbing Tunisia within her wholly-owned possessions.

For the first time since the French regency was established in 1881, a French general has been made minister of war in the government of the Bey of Tunis. He is Gen. Amedee Blanc, commander of France's armies in Tunisia.

With him as war minister, all the Bey's forces will be integrated in the military might of the French empire. In the event of conflict with Italy, all Tunisian natives would be liable to military service as Frenchmen.

Officials expected other measures which would end any semblance of independence.

Such action, which Italy would be expected to protest, would place Tunisia's Italians on the same footing as Italians living in France and would end the Fascists' legal case for a share in the country's control.

Britain Cautions Hitler

British ministers, who conferred with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain today, sounded warnings reminiscent of "go easy" speeches aimed at Chancellor Hitler before the Munich crisis last September.

In front of military preparations was a direct radio appeal to Chancellor Hitler and the German people to banish "the specter of war and enmity between nations." The appeal was made by 18 of the most prominent British leaders outside political life and was broadcast in German over facilities of the government-controlled British Broadcasting Corporation.

In Paris informed circles said the French cabinet would take up tomorrow proposals to add three months to the two-year term of obligatory military services. Also to be considered, it was stated, was the calling to duty of some special army reservists. These suggestions were said to have resulted from Italy's calling up of 60,000 reservists Wednesday.

An official British government publication disclosed that Maj. Gen. H. O. B. Wemyss, assistant adjutant general in the war office from 1935 to 1937, had been appointed director of mobilization to whip Britain's fighting forces into battle trim.

In addresses and publications British minister emphasized the nation's resurgent military might.

Retreat Becomes Rout

By the United Press.

Perpignan, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Jan. 27.—Insurgent troops and bombing planes today swept up the Mediterranean coast from conquered Barcelona, driving disorganized loyalists toward a pocket on the French border and strewing highways with the bodies of refugees.

Persons crossing the frontier described "panic and chaos" around Figueras and Gerona, new seats of loyalist resistance, and said that Generalissimo Francisco Franco's bombers were spreading carnage along the main highway from Barcelona.

Dead Piled in Fields

Scores of men, women and children trudging from the war zone were said to have been cut down by the bombs and machine-gun bullets of the insurgent planes. Their bodies were dragged into fields along the congested highway.

The French foreign office announced tonight, after day-long consideration of the situation which threatens to send between 100,000 and 200,000 destitute civilians and soldiers across the border into France, that the loyalist regime has rejected a "neutral zone" proposal for northern Spain as impractical and impossible.

Instead, the loyalist government asked that France agree to give refuge to 150,000 Spanish refugees in French North Africa. Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet promised to submit the request to the council of ministers Saturday.

Bonnet informed Loyalist Foreign Minister Julio Alvarez del Vayo two days ago that France could not assume the burden of caring for 150,000 refugees, although any women or children reaching the frontier would not be denied refuge.

Camps Set Up

Three camps already have been set up on the French side of the border near Perthus under orders of Minister of Interior Albert Sarraut. About 2,700 loyalists—mostly women and children—have been permitted to cross the border.

Bonnet asked the Russian embassy whether Russia would receive any loyalist refugees, especially the hundreds of thousands of men and women on Franco's so-called "blacklist" of political enemies who face death before firing squads if captured.

The French cruiser La Fortune arrived at Port Vendres with a load of refugees from the Barcelona area and, in addition to the 2,700 who entered France during the day, arrangements were made at Cerbere

President Backs Plane Sale to France

Defends Aid as Way To Gear Factories For Big Production For U. S. Program

An Administration move, bearing President Roosevelt's personal indorsement, to aid French rearmament by furnishing that country latest type American military planes was disclosed yesterday.

Immediately following announcement by the President that official approval had been given to a plan for idle aircraft factories to build planes for the French, an investigation was launched in the Senate to obtain details of the move, said to have been ordered in the face of War Department opposition.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Secretary of War Woodring were called before an executive session of the Senate Military Committee for questioning as to the deal, and afterwards Senator Sheppard, chairman of the group, said Army officials and probably aircraft manufacturers would be called, "to go to the bottom of the matter."

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt asked for an immediate start on plans to increase the U. S. Army air strength by 3,200 planes. He asked for appropriation of $50,000,000 at once to provide 565 new planes, stating through Budget Director Bell that the program should be started now "to correct the present lag in aircraft production due to idle plants."

Crash Started Inquiry

The Senate inquiry resulted from questions put to Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps, at hearings on the defense program. "Isolationist" Senators insisted on knowing how a French air ministry official, Paul Chemidlin, happened to be aboard a new Douglas attack bomber which crashed in California a few days ago.

Yesterday's session was directed toward determining who authorized the demonstration for the French official, but at its conclusion it was announced that, since this was not yet definitely learned, Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff, will be questioned today.

The Senate investigators were told, it is understood, that the first suggestion the French be allowed to buy newest design United States fighting planes came from Ambassador William Bullitt. He is said to have taken the proposal to the War Department which, according to yesterday's testimony, turned it down.

Morgenthau Backed Plan

He then is supposed to have approached Secretary Morgenthau, and the two of them to have "sold" it to the President. The President, the committee was told, wrote a letter to the Secretaries of War, Navy and Treasury asking them to "co-operate" with the French mission. Following this, the War Department issued a permit for the mission to inspect the Douglas plane and agreed to its sale abroad.

War Department officials said yesterday that the Army had agreed to demonstration of the plane and its sale to the French government. They declined to answer questions as to whether the department earlier had declined such permission.

Roosevelt Defends Sale

At the close of the hearing, some doubt existed among members as to whether the War Department order included the right to inspect the secret equipment on the plane. Senator Sheppard said it had been established that new bombsights, said to be the Army's most closely guarded secret, were not on the plane in the test. Department officials declared flatly that no restricted equipment was on the plane.

President Roosevelt, in revealing the move at his press conference, denied the Government was assisting French purchase of planes,

Bi-Partisan Group Named To Hear Amlie

'Fair' Inquiry Pledged; Johnson Named Quiz Chairman

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday instructed a special five-man sub-committee to hold hearings on President Roosevelt's appointment of Thomas R. Amlie, left-wing Wisconsin Progressive, to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Chairman Wheeler immediately appointed Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, chairman of the group.

Johnson, who said he had "no predilections" on the nomination, promised "extensive hearings, with an opportunity for Mr. Amlie to be heard."

Other members of the sub-committee, reputedly divided down party lines on the nomination, are Senators Schwartz, of Wyoming, and Hill, of Alabama (Democrats), and Austin, of Vermont, and Reed, of Kansas (Republicans).

Amlie, former member of the House, defeated in a race for the Senate in last fall's Progressive primary, has been attacked as a "Communist" by both Houses of the Wisconsin Legislature, which has petitioned the President to withdraw his appointment. He is author of a proposed Constitutional amendment to give Congress the power to take over business by eminent domain, and proponent of an "industrial expansion bill" setting up a ten-year plan for industry to be laid down by a board and enforced by processing taxes.

First request to be heard in opposition to the nomination came in a telegram from William H. Shenners, jr., executive secretary of the Wisconsin Democratic State central committee, which recently protested the Presidents' action.

"We implore you to set a date for a public hearing so that we may have an opportunity to have a Wisconsin delegation to present testimony," said Shenners in a wire to Senator Austin.

Andrews Picks Carolina Firm As Pay Act Test

Fayetteville Concern Charged With Violating Labor Standards Act

By the United Press.

Wage hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews last night selected a Fayetteville, N. C., silk and rayon weaving concern for the first court test of the three-months-old Federal fair labor standards act.

Andrews asked the United States Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina to enjoin the Central Weaving and Spinning Corporation from allegedly violating the act.

Andrews charged the concern, which employs more than 150 persons, has "depressed wage standards and employed 'speed-up' methods of production to such an extent that in the latter part of 1938, and in January, 1939, many of the defendant's employes were paid less than 15 cents per hour while the earnings of weavers employed by defendant were less during such period for operating six looms than they had been for operating two looms in 1932."

The firm also was charged with falsification of its work records.

Associate General Counsel George A. McNulty emphasized that the action is a civil suit.

To establish the interstate character of the defendant's business, the complaint alleged the cloth produced by the Central Weaving & Spinning Corporation, was made of raw silk shipped to Fayetteville from points outside the State.

"All of the cloth so produced by the defendant has been and is shipped and transported in interstate commerce," the complaint added.

The company is headed by Jacob A. Neider, whose offices are at 221 West Thirty-seventh street, New York. Max Lefkowitz is the resident manager.

Neider denied records were falsified and said the concern had been paying "only a penny or so" below the standard and had been given until the end of the month to meet requirements.

Committee Handed Row On Va. Judge

Roberts Appointment Is Put Up to Senate Judiciary Group; Dies Assails Allred

The controversy over President Roosevelt's apointment of Floyd H. Roberts to be Federal judge in the Western District of Virginia was dropped into the lap of the full Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday when a subcommittee reported the nomination with neither indorsement nor disapproval.

Both Senators Glass and Byrd, of Virginia, bitterly opposed to Robers confirmation, are expected to voice their objections at a public hearing of the full committee on Wednesday. The Post learned last night that Judge Roberts will come to Washington from his home in Bristol, Va., in order to be "available" in case the committee desires to question him.

Roberts, formerly judge of the Bristol Corporation Court, was named to the Federal bench by President Roosevelt last July. The appointment was received as a slap at conservative Democrats, as the President ignored candidates proposed by Virginia's two conservative Senators in order to name a man who had the indorsement of Representative Flannagan, ardent New Dealer.

He'll Be Represented

The Post was informed that even if Judge Roberts does not appear personally in the committee room Wednesday, he will be represented at the hearing. It was thought possible that a delegation might come from southwest Virginia in his support.

Meanwhile, another sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee heard Representative Dies, of Texas, denounce the President's appointment of former Gov. James V. Allred to be judge in the newly created Southern District of Texas.

The two Texas Democratic Senators, Sheppard and Connally told the sub-committee that they would not raise objections to Allred's confirmation, although both had recommended other candidates. In the absence of Senator King, Utah Democrat, the sub-committee deferred action, but eventual approval of Allred is to be expected.

Confirmation Doubtful

In the case of Roberts, however, the intense opposition of Senators Glass and Byrd is likely to block confirmation of the nominee.

Senator Glass, who has termed the nomination "utterly and personally obnoxious" to Byrd and to himself, declared last night he hoped to obtain an adverse report from the Judiciary Committee. Previously, it had been suggested he would merely attempt to have the nomination pigeonholed in committee, thus permitting Roberts to serve under his recess appointment until final adjournment of Congress next summer. Recess appointees receive no salary until confirmation by the Senate.

Prior to Roberts' appointment, Glass and Byrd had recommended Assistant United States District Attorney Frank H. Tavenner or Circuit Judge A. C. Buchanan for the post.

Presided 24 Years

Judge Roberts, who is 55, had presided over the Bristol Corporation Court for 24 years until his elevation to the Federal bench last summer.

Senate confirmation of the nominee, despite active opposition of the two Senators from his State, would be almost unprecedented—at least in recent years.

Senator Borah, dean of the upper house in point of service, said last night that in only one major instance that he could recall were two Senators from a State overridden by their colleagues when

26 Democrats Join 20 Republicans and Shipstead to Kill $875,000,000 Total

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate yesterday by one vote turned back the President's request for an $875,000,000 relief appropriation and routed the Administration's leadership in the session's first test of the new spending program.

The vote was 47 to 46—so close that one switch would have changed the result. But the effect was to clinch the smaller $725,000,000 figure previously voted by the House and to give Vice President Garner's economy allies a clean victory in the most dramatic battle of the new Congress.

A coalition composed of 26 Democrats, 20 Republicans and 1 Farmer-Laborite supplied the single ballot margin necessary to defeat an amendment by Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, to restore the $150,000,000 cut.

41 Democrats Vote Aye

Failing in a breath-taking finish to restore the appropriation to the President's figure were 41 Democrats, 2 Republicans, 1 Progressive, 1 Independent and 1 Farmer-Laborite.

Without a record vote, the Senate later agreed to ban from Civil Service coverage some 33,000 WPA administrative employes in Washington and in the field. They otherwise would have come under the classified service by Presidential order on February 1. The Senate tightened the House provision so that anyone paid from emergency relief funds, in whatever agency employed, would be excluded from Civil Service.

And without controversy the Senate approved the so-called "snow amendment" designed to ease the hardship of the $150,000,000 decrease. This forbids removal of more than 5 per cent of relief workers from WPA in the winter months of February and March. It provides for submission of additional estimates by the President if an emergency develops and it requires a WPA investigation of rolls to eliminate "those not in actual need."

Galleries were packed and the floor crowded to the walls as the clerk called the roll for the "aye" and "no" verdict that was to bring the bitterest controversy of the session to a close. Applause from the galleries, quickly stifled by gavel-pounding, greeted announcement of the result.

Byrnes Blocks Recount

Vice President Garner, reputed back-stage advocate of the slash, was not in the chair as the ballots were counted. He had turned his gavel over to Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, president pro tem.

In a swift maneuver to prevent a recount, Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote, and Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, moved to lay the motion on the table. The Senate agreed and the vote thus was clinched.

Senators who had left sickrooms to vote for the cut began a slow exodus. Majority Leader Barkley, who had predicted an Administration victory, sat silent, checking the roll call. Smiling, Byrnes, who had devised the committee's "compromise" formula, congratulated Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, who had led the fight for the slash.

"The vote is my comment," Byrnes later told reporters.

New Request Seen in March

"This is evidence of an awakened appreciation of the necessity for economy," said Adams. "The result should be of great encouragement to the American people.

"It is not going to deprive anybody of proper relief. The funds

'May as Well Fold Up' if Cut, Says WPA Here

Cass Warns Big Slash Will Imperil Welfare Rolls

Otto J. Cass, deputy WPA administrator for the District, declared yesterday that if any drastic reduction is made in the local WPA roll "we might as well fold up."

He was commenting on possible effect of the Senate action in sustaining the $150,000,000 House cut in the $875,000,000 deficiency relief appropriation.

Cass, however, did not believe Congressional action would have to be reflected in a severe reduction in the local WPA roll. So many factors enter into the situation, he declared, that it would be impossible to forecast what effect the deficiency appropriation slash will have here.

Assigned 11,400 Jobs

"All I can say," Cass declared, "is that the Philadelphia regional office has assigned us a quota of 11,400 jobs for February. That is a drop of 200 below the January quota of 11,600.

"We are going ahead on the quota assigned us for February. If there is any reduction below the February figure, I am going to put up a howl.

"We have mapped out projects and have them going. If our quota should be cut 17 per cent—a figure proportionate to the cut in the deficiency bill—our projects would be so disrupted that we might as well throw them overboard. That would mean a lot of waste, not only in half-finished projects but

Embassy Seeks 68 Americans Caught in Chilean Quake Zone

By the United Press.

Santiago, Chile, Jan. 27.—The United States Embassy tonight sought information regarding fate of 68 American residents of the earthquake zone south of here after reports that a small son of one of them was among the 15,000 officially estimated to have been killed.

Only word concerning the Americans the embassy has received since Tuesday night's disaster was a report that Michael Sweet, 7, and his grandmother, a Mrs. Trumbell, were killed when the farmhouse of his father, Portland R. Sweet, a native of Vanceburg, Ky., collapsed.

The other Americans are scattered throughout the area.

Meanwhile, soldiers and sailors worked to restore order in the stricken area and drastic measures were invoked to avert famine and disease.

The government ordered immediate evacuation of Couquenes, Parral, Chillan, San Carlos and Linares, the cities hardest hit by the disaster, to permit burial of dead which strewed debris-laden streets and to prevent outbreak of epidemics.

Gen. Carlos Fuentes, commander in chief of the armed forces, canceled all leaves and officers and enlisted men were ordered to report for patrol duty.

At midday the government commandeered all long and short wave radio stations and the only press reports permitted to be broadcast were those supplied by the ministry of interior.

German Priests' Relief Fund Seized, Berlin Reports

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Jan. 27.—Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles, replying to critics of the Administration's foreign policy, tonight called for full publicity on all "propaganda" and other views being broadcast with a view of influencing the Nation's course.

Declaring the greatest need at the present critical time is for the people to "do their own thinking for themselves," he said they "must be authoritatively informed whenever the views they hear over the radio or read in print represent propaganda, . . . direct or indirect."

He termed it essential "that further thought be given to the method by which the full origin and background of the views presented to them can be made readily available to them."

In an address before the annual meeting of the New York Bar Association he pointed to opposite charges that had been made against the foreign policy. "One individual," he said, "tells us that no one knows what the foreign policy of our Government really is. Another proclaims that our foreign policy is rapidly driving our people into war."

The Under Secretary declared that in this "gravely serious—deeply disquieting moment," the main objective in official circles "is to keep the United States at peace."

At the same time, Welles said,

4th Doctor Quits, Calls Greenbelt 'On Unsound Basis'

The Greenbelt (Md.) Health Association was left without the services of a resident physician last night when the board of directors accepted the resignation of Dr. Alvin Wode. He is the fourth physician to resign since the association was formed less than a year ago.

Dr. Wode said his duties at Georgetown Hospital, where he holds a fellowship, and unsatisfactory financial arrangements at Greenbelt were responsible for his resignation. He declared:

"The project is run on an economically unsound basis. I doubt whether it will succeed. Not only were our salaries uncertain, but, when we treated private cases not affiliated with the health association, collections were almost impossible."

U. S. Women Flee Mexico

New York, Jan. 27 (AP).—There's not a single "hot" tune among President Roosevelt's nine favorite songs which will be broadcast Monday night as a birthday greeting to the President in conjunction with the campaign against infantile paralysis. Band Leader Kay Kyser wrote asking Mr. Roosevelt for his favorites. He got this list: "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," "Juanita," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Anchors Aweigh," "Yellow Rose of Texas," "Boots and Saddles," "Last Roundup," "Old Kentucky Home," and "Home on the Range."

Efficiency Hope Of Democracy, Says Wallace

System Not Doomed, His New Book Holds, If All Strive as One

Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, in his book "Paths to Plenty," published yesterday, assails totalitarian charges that democracy is doomed, and urges all clergymen to redefine religion in terms of general welfare.

"Democracy is on trial today," the Secretary writes. "It has been challenged in this country and the whole world. Organized violence, disregarding legal rights, moral rights and individual rights threatens to destroy the democratic ideal.

"Those who advocate the rule of force ridicule democracy. They say democracy does not work. They say that only through discipline imposed from above can there be any security for the common people. Even in this country, where we have never known anything but democracy, this dangerous doctrine is beginning to be heard. . . .

"We Americans must not and will not let the rule of force replace the rule of law. But if we are going to succeed, our democracy must be efficient and it must have purpose. It is vital that the wills and hearts of all the people of the United States be captured by the doctrine of the general welfare in the capitalistic-democratic sense of the term. We should seek it more enthusiastically, more efficiently, and more righteously under our set-up than do the Nazis and Communists under theirs."

To carry this country safely through the twentieth century, Secretary Wallace offers a seven-point democratic creed which includes:

Action based on the will of the majority after the people have had opportunity to inform themselves as to the real facts.

Freedom of speech, press, art, science and religion.

Stability, order and the avoidance of violence, bloodshed and anarchy.

Promotion of a stable but ascending general welfare by increasing the productivity of the people and by adopting price, wage and other policies which distribute income more evenly among the people but which do not diminish the incentive to increase production. This means continuous co-ordination of policies and functions.

Belief that there are extraordinary possibilities in both man and nature which have not yet been realized, but which can be made manifest only if the individualistic yet co-operative genius of democratic institutions is preserved, thus making it possible for those who are gifted in art, science and religion to approach the unknown reverentially, and not under the compulsion of producing immediate results for the glorification of one man, one group, one race or one nation.

Joyous faith in a progressive future based on the intelligent and constructive efforts of all the people to serve the general welfare.

Tolerance and humor which, in recognizing the right of all men to be different, smiles understandingly at those who are so different as to be funny. (And at one time or another all of us are funny, or at any rate we should be.)"

The secretary's book is published by the National Home Library Foundation.

Senator Reynolds Ask Committee to Study Mexican Seizures of American Properties

Senator Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, asked the Senate yesterday to appoint a special committee to investigate seizure of American properties by the Mexican government.

REYNOLDS

His resolution alleged that the seizures without compensation was a violation of international law.

Reynolds also contended the seized properties were being used for trade and commerce with European and Asiatic nations and that these transactions would "enable these foreign governments to control the political affairs of Mexico."

The House Agriculture Committee decided yesterday to start general hearings in about two weeks on all proposals to change the agricultural adjustment act.

Members said they would consider first any minor corrections deemed necessary in the year-old act, then would start hearing advocates of general substitute measures such as the domestic allotment nad cost of production plans.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee ordered hearings on a bill designed to prohibit "blind selling" and "block booking" of motion pictures.

The measure by Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, was passed by the Senate at the last session but failed to reach a vote in the House.

Neely said the "block booking" and "blind selling" forced theater owners to sign contracts for pictures without seeing them, and sometimes before the pictures had been produced.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, urged in the Senate that Government monetary and credit controls be utilized to raise prices. Among other things, Thomas suggested lower discount rates, gold desterilization, lower bank reserve requirements and further devaluation of the dollar.

New Measures Introduced included:

By Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, a bill to remove the present time limit on the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank.

By Senator Morris Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, a bill for free examination of joint stock land banks now in liquidation.

By Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat), Florida, a joint resolution authorizing national observance of August 19 each year as Aviation Day.

By Senator Guy M. Gillette (Democrat), Iowa, the international agreement for regulation of whaling, signed at London in June, 1937, for ratification by the Senate.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, chairman of the Administration's $500,000 monopoly investigation, summoned the group to meet January 30 to determine its future course.

are adequate, and if they are not, they will be made adequate."

Barkley, forsaken at the last by some Administration votes on which he had counted, philosophically accepted the outcome, which he said "settled the money matter." But he declared more money will be necessary to tide WPA over the next five months, and said the President will have to ask for additional funds "early in March."

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, left a sick bed to cast his vote for the cut. Other ill members who returned for the ballot when they could not obtain "pairs" were Senators Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Gibson, of Vermont (Republicans). Both voted against the increase.

A certain vote for the slash by Senator Chavez (Democrat), of New Mexico, was lost by his absence, and refusal of closely-pressed Administration Senators to pair him.

Shipstead Turns Tide

The roll call was replete with surprises and a last-minute switch turned the tide previously inclining in favor of an increase. Senator Shipstead, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, who had favored the larger amount, voted for the decrease. He said he was swayed by evidence that WPA employes had been urged to wire their Senators and had been supplied with a specimen telegram.

Other upsets were the economy ballots of Senators Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, and Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania. Davis had offered an amendment to increase the appropriation conditionally.

Enraged at his colleague's vote, Senator Guffey rushed over to his desk and asked: "Shall I explain your vote to the people of Pennsylvania?" Later Guffey in a statement said "81,000 workers who will be removed from relief rolls in Pennsylvania may thank Senator Davis."

Davis Defends Vote

Davis replied with a statement that Pennsylvania last November "walloped Guffey and his gang." He said no Pennsylvania workers necessarily need be dropped from the rolls and declared Guffey "shall not have any more lump sum appropriations for his political use with my vote."

Senator Barkley told reporters he understood Davis had been called earlier in the day by "a big Pennsylvania businessman." A reporter asked if he meant Joseph Pew, Philadelphia businessman and politician. Barkley said he did. Informed of this, Davis said he had been called "by a lot of people, but nobody tells me how to vote."

As the 3 p. m. deadline for the vote neared, Administration advocates of the President's figure were shut off from the floor when Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, used up the entire hour and a half assigned to their side with a monetary speech.

Byrnes Hits "Pressure"

Senator Adams and Senator Byrnes, co-advocates of the cut, made the most of the remaining time. Byrnes denied the cut necessarily would mean a sharp trimming of the rolls beginning in April that would reduce the number of workers on WPA from 3,000,000 to 1,050,000 by June. McKellar had contended it would mean such a cut. ers could be employed in June, Byrnes argued that 2,000,000 workmore than were on the rolls in January last year.

Both Byrnes and Adams referred to the "pressure" brought to bear on Senators in behalf of the larger appropriation.

"You may have thought that everybody in the world was writing to you," Byrnes told his colleagues. "But it is the duty of the legislator to remember the man who never wires, who never writes but who has confidence in your integrity."

Adams Urges Economy

Adams, in his concluding plea for economy, asked the Senate to vote to "protect the country from "loose fiscal policies."

"The country is looking at Congress," he said. "We have been liberal with money that generations coming after us will have to pay. From this bill they may receive some encouragement."

He asked colleagues if they could not "read the signs of the November elections?"

After the vote, Adams said he wanted to pay tribute "to some who have voted in here who stood up under a great deal of pressure."

Elated at the outcome, Chairman Glass, of the Senate Appropriations Committee, who has battled lumpsum appropriations for relief from the outset of the New Deal, expressed doubt, however, that the money saved "will stay long in the Treasury."

Norris Calls It "Mistake"

Senator Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the Finance Committee and closely aligned with the new economy movement, said the Senate's action "will be reassuring to the country."

But Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, who voted for the McKellar amendment, said it was "very serious, and a big mistake."

McKellar took his defeat grinning. "We got beat by one vote; that's all there is to it," said the Tennesseean. "The Senate thinks $725,000,000 is enough. If it is, nobody will be any happier than I."

After the economy ballot, the Senate moved half way through the deficiency relief bill before it struck a snag in efforts to revise a series of provisions against politics in relief written into the measure by the Appropriations Committee. A recess was taken until noon today, when Barkley will make an effort to finish action on the bill.

Politics Ban Broadened

Sections approved without a record vote provide:

That persons over 65 years of age or women with dependent children shall be continued eligible for work relief, despite Social Security act aids.

That no part of the fund shall be used by any Federal agency to establish mills or factories which would manufacture for sale any articles in competition with private industry.

That veterans shall receive first preference in WPA applications, other American citizens next, and aliens who applied for citizenship before June 21, 1938, next.

Before recess was taken, the Senate broadened the ban on use of WPA jobs as a "reward" for political activity by accepting an amendment by Majority Leader Barkley making the prohibition apply to all Federal agencies.

Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, immediately opened a fight similarly to strengthen other provisions in the bill banning politics. He asked that any person, whether employed in a Federal agency or outside, be barred from bringing influence to bear to fire Federal workers because of opposition to or support of a political candidate. A vote on the Hatch amendment will be the first order of business when the Senate resumes today.

Four "Purgees" for Cut

Joining in the vote against the President's full $875,000,000 figure were all four of the Democratic Senators whose "purge" was attempted by the Administration in last year's primaries. They were Senators Tydings, of Maryland, George, of Georgia; Smith, of South Carolina, and Gillette, of Iowa.

Besides Reynolds, "surprise" votes on the anti-Administration side of the roll call were those of Senators Lucas, of Illinois, and Truman, of Missouri, both of whom usually go along with the President. It was Truman's first bolt. A close friend of the Vice President, he had voted for the $725,000,000 figure in the Appropriations Committee and refused to budge from that position in the Senate.

On the other hand, nine Democratic Senators, independent in their views who have not hesitated in the past to vote their opposition to some Administration measures, voted for the increase. These included Senators Andrews, of Florida; Connally, Texas; Clark, Idaho; Donahey, Ohio; Johnson, Colorado; O'Mahoney, Wyoming; Walsh, Massachusetts; Wheeler, Montana, and Miller, Arkansas.

SEC Confers With Murphy On Gianninis

Possibility Is Seen Justice Department May Enter Case

Possibility developed yesterday that the Justice Department might join in the legal battle between the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Giannini banking group of the Pacific Coast.

Department intervention was believed to have been discussed in a conference between Attorney General Murphy and officials of the SEC and Federal banking agencies.

Meanwhile, Cyril B. Upham, First Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, filed in the District Supreme Court an affidavit denying the contention of Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, San Francisco, chief Giannini bank, that its combined balance sheet was prepared from the report of condition prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency and followed the form of the condition report.

Bank Has Filed Suit

Bank of America has filed suit for injunction in the District Court to prevent the SEC from examining its books and records in connection with a stock-delisting proceeding against Transamerica Corporation. Giannini bank-holding company. The commission charged that Transamerica filed financial reports containing "false and misleading statements."

The Upham affidavit is intended to aid the SEC in its fight to examine Bank of America books. Upham declared the Comptroller does not prescribe accounting practices to be followed by national banks.

Meanwhile, the SEC, in an answer to the injunction suit filed in the District Court, declared that national bank examiners had "repeatedly criticized" Bank of America and its officers.

SEC Answers

Bank of America contends that, under the law, the SEC is not entitled to examine books of a national bank.

SEC declared that neither the Secretary of the Treasury in furnishing the commission with data relating to Bank of America, nor the commission in making use of such information, "has acted contrary to law."

Officials were silent as to the nature of the conference with Murphy. It was disclosed, however, that legal aspects of the court action begun by Bank of America were discussed.

Those attending the conference, besides Murphy, were: Upham, Chairman William O. Douglas of the SEC, Chairman Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board, Chairman Leo T. Crowley of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Edward H. Foley, jr., acting general counsel of the Treasury, and Chester T. Lane, SEC general counsel.

A hearing will be held in the District Supreme Court Monday on the injunction proceeding.

The American Federation of Labor said yesterday possibilities of peace with the C. I. O. would be "explored" by the A. Cass Warns WPA May 'Fold if Cut' in materials bought to carry them out."

Cass scoffed at forecasts that the District roll would have to be slashed drastically because of the cut. Areas with heavy seasonal employment, he pointed out, usually can bear a large part of any necessary reduction.

Money can be saved, he said, through reduction in material purchases to spread employment, and voluntary absences of workers can be used to give work to others.

"Due to all the factors involved, there is no point in trying to guess what reduction may have to be made here," he declared.

The cut in the local roll from the 12,800 peak has been accomplished largely by dismissing mothers with children under 16 years of age and persons over 65 years of age. This procedure is justified on the ground that these people are eligible for social security benefits.

they complained that the nominee was "personally obnoxious."

That incident occurred several years ago, Senator Borah said, when a colored man was named collector of internal revenue in Louisiana. Both Senators objected, but the Senate sustained the appointment.

There have been a few cases when the opposition of one Senator has been overruled. Two years ago, Senator Rush Holt, West Virginia Democrat, at odds with the Administration, claimed that F. Roy Yoke, nominated to be internal revenue collector, was "personally obnoxious." Holt's colleague, Senator Neely, indorsed the nominee and he was confirmed.

In another famous case, however, George Rublee, Washington attorney now attempting to negotiate the refugee problem with Germany, was voted don by the Senate when Senator Gallinger, New Hampshire Republican, vehemently fought his appointment as Federal Trade Commissioner in 1915. In that spectacular battle, Gallinger's Democratic colleague, Senator Hollis, defended Rublee in vain.

In voicing his objection to the Allred appointment, Representative Dies yesterday asserted that "it's the beginning of carpetbagging." Dies charged Allred had never resided in the judicial district to which President Roosevelt appointed him.

Also attacking the Allred nomination was R. R. Grovey, chairman of the Houston Negro Citizens Committee.

British Quell Spanish Riots At Gibraltar

Italian Crowds Storm French Consulates; Gayda Assails France

By the United Press.

Gibraltar, Jan. 27.—All police of this British fortress were called out tonight to quell rioting which broke out in the main street between anti-Fascists and Spanish insurgents who were celebrating the fall of Barcelona.

Police charged with clubs into a crowd of loyalist sympathizers who broke a police cordon around the insurgent headquarters and stormed in to attack the guests.

Authorities said attempts had been made to set fire to the building.

French Consulate Attacked

Rome, Jan. 27 (U.P.).—Italian troops, carabineers and firemen today battled crowds of students who attempted to storm the French consulates and embassy in Rome and Genoa.

The students had been released from classes to celebrate the fall of Barcelona.

In Genoa troops and police, unable to stem a crowd of 1,500 marching on the French consulate, called out firemen who dispersed the shouting youths with water. A dozen students were hurt and more than 20 arrested.

In Rome a similar demonstration occurred around the French embassy and the French Institute in Farnese square.

A detachment of soldiers and about 200 carabineers were called out when the student demonstration got out of hand and a din of insults was raised outside the French Embassy.

Soldiers drove the students back. Policemen cordoned off six streets leading toward the square, scene of several anti-French demonstrations in the last two months.

The students appeared to have no thought of the conquest of Barcelona and to be intent only upon insulting France. At several places they threatened to smash windows of stores not displaying the Italian flag or bearing non-Italian names. Older Fascist officials in civilian clothes dissuaded them from violence.

Gayda Assails France

Virginio Gayda, editor of Giornale D'Italia, which often serves Mussolini as a mouthpiece, denounced what he called a "secret pact between France and loyalist Spain assuring the free transit of black troops across Spanish territory from French Africa to the European frontiers of France."

Gayda said "Spain, who was obliged to submit to the great tragedy of servitude, was under a continual (French) threat of being dragged into a European war in the exclusive service of France."

Czechs Get Allied Loan

London, Jan. 27 (A.P.).—The British and French governments today signed an agreement presenting about £8,000,000 ($37,360,000) to Czecho-Slovakia as an outright gift and lending her another £8,000,000 to use in caring for refugees.

The agreement was signed at the foreign office by Viscount Halifax, British Foreign Secretary; Charles Corbin, French Ambassador to London, and Dr. Vilem Pospisil, Czecho-Slovak financial expert.

Brtiain made a gift to Czecho-Slovakia of £4,000,000 and France cancelled a debt of 700,000,000 francs —approximately equal to the British gift—owed by Czecho-Slovaks to French bankers since 1937.

The £8,000,000 loan will be guaranteed equally by the Franch and British governments.

Poles Prefer Neutrality

Berlin, Jan. 27 (A.P.).—Poland has declined to hitch her wagon to the rising Nazi star, informed quarters said today, and prefers to sit in the traditional buffer seat between Germany and Soviet Russia.

This was said to be the main result of German feelers put out in the talks of Col. Joseph Beck, Polish minister, January 5 with Chancellor Hitler at Berchtesgaden, and by German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop in his Warsaw visit, which ended today.

Germany's next step, it was believed, would be to determine how far to back the demands of Italy's Fascists for "justice" in Africa when Italian Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano visits Berlin, perhaps within a few weeks.

France Recognition Urged

Gannon, president of Fordham University; W. H. McCarthy, postmaster of San Francisco; the most Rev. Francis C. Kelley, Roman Catholic Bishop of Oklahoma, and Ellery Sedgewick, editor emeritus of the Atlantic Monthly. President of the union is Merwin K. Hart, president of the New York State economy council and prominent protestant Episcoal layman.

Erika Mann To Lecture on Nazi Schools

Thomas Mann's Daughter to Address Barnard Club Luncheon

Erika Mann, daughter of Thomas Mann and a noted author in her own right, will discuss "School for Barbarians" at a luncheon of the Barnard College at 1:15 p. m. today in the Mayflower Hotel.

Miss Mann's latest book, bearing the same title as today's lecture, analyzes the Nazi educational system and probable results for a generation of "children in goose-step." A volume in which she collaborated with her brother Klaus, "Escape to Life," will be published this year.

Pupil of Max Reinhardt

A pupil of Max Reinhardt, Miss Mann was a prominent actress in republican Germany. She wrote, directed and acted in "Peppermill," a satirical revue performed more than 1,000 times in six countries.

With other members of her family, she went into exile when Hitler came to power in 1933. Disguised as a peasant, she returned once to rescue the manuscript of her father's novel, "Joseph and His Brethren."

'All Catalonia Vast Hospital' As Franco Harries Routed Foes

Spain

to receive about 2,000 Spanish children.

Those arriving abroad the cruiser organize any account of the utter —most of them were unable to confusion and terror of the past 48 hours—said that "all Catalonia appears to be one vast hospital."

"It is panic and chaos," said an old woman, who told how cafes in villages along the highway to Barcelona had been transformed into first aid stations to care for civilians wounded by the strafing insurgent planes and soldiers wounded in the fighting which preceded Barcelona's fall.

A French customs officer carried a baby across the border a few minutes before the chains went up at 8 p. m., closing the border for the night. Beside him trudged the mother, sobbing, "Thank heavens, we don't hear the guns and bombs any more."

Franco's Burgos base announced his columns, pushing northward in forced marches, were only 43 miles in a straight line from Gerona after a swift advance that closed a pocket on 50 towns and villages and an important industrial area.

The plight of the refugees was in contrast to rejoicing that continued in Barcelona in celebration of Franco's conquest of Spain's greatest city.

Thousands of Catalonians knelt in the Plaza de Catalunya in the first open-air mass held in the city since the start of the civil war.

Several thousand of Franco's famous "Fifth Column" of sympathizers emerged from hiding and joined his armed forces as courts martial were established to try leaders and terrorists among nearly nearly 4,000 prisoners taken in the conquest of Barcelona.

The members of the "Fifth Column," some of whom said they had not been out of doors in months, will act as witnesses against many of the Loyalist leaders on trial for destruction and terrorism.

The secret sympathizers of Franco who remained in the city under enemy rule will be incorporated into the Barcelona police force and the Nationalist Falangist (Fascist) divisions.

Gen. Jose Davila, commanding the Insurgent army in Catalonia, brought the city under martial law, annulled all Loyalist decrees, demanded the immediate surrender of arms, public documents and "illegally acquired" (looted) valuables and then proclaimed a holiday for rejoicing and prayer for the "liberation of Barcelona."

Mass was attended by Gen Yague, who started the civil war in Algeciras on July 17, 1936, and other nationalist leaders who participated in the occupation. They included Gens. Davila, Jose Vignon, Bautista Sanchez, Camilo Alonzo, Garcia Asensio, Leon Barron and Coco and Lopez Bravo.

Franco still delayed his entry to the city in order to direct a drive northward against the retreating loyalist army. He intended to scatter it before it had time to reorganize.

The first work of the conquerors was to provide food for the 1,500,000 near-famished people of Barcelona. A line more than a mile long formed at the famous Cafe Oro Del Rhin to get rations of bread, chocolate, condensed milk and canned fish brought into the city by trucks, airplanes and ships.

One convoy of trucks arriving from Burgos carried 8,000 tons of foodstuffs, sufficient to supply the normal needs of the city for three or four days.

Brig. Gen. Eliseo Alvarez, under secretary of public order in the nationalist government junta, was named chief of all public services, both civil and military, in the Barcelona area.

The insurgents tonight announced the capture of the highway and railroad terminals of Sabadell, 7 miles northeast of Barcelona, where loyalist rear-guards had put up a stiff fight against encirclement.

Simultaneously along the coast road Franco's Moors reported the capture of the port of Mataro, 16 miles northeast of Barcelona.

"Nowhere is the enemy showing signs of rallying," insurgent field commanders reported.

The air strafing ahead of Franco's columns was described as the most terrific experienced thus far in northern Catalonia. It centered for the most part on Gerona and Figueras, a town of 48,000, 16 miles from the French border, where Premier Juan Negrin has established his government residence in the Peralada Chateau, owned by Miguel Mateu y Pla, millionaire manufacturer of automobiles, who today became Franco's mayor of Barcelona.

Madrid Promises Aid

Insurgent dispatches told of "swift progress on all fronts in Catalonia," particularly in the Moroccan drive up the coast road which was said to have brought the capture of 1,800 loyalists, 10 cannon and other war material.

The capture of enormous stocks of war material around Barcelona, including 600 cars and 800 trucks filled with munitions, was said by the insurgents to have revealed the "complete collapse" of loyalist organization in Catalonia.

The loyalists, falling back to an area of between 35,000 and 40,000 square miles—about the size of the State of Ohio—said their armies were intact and were forming along a new line north of Sabadell to face the enemy.

It was indicated Negrin and his commander in chief, Vicente Rojo, have about 200,000 or 250,000 poorly-equipped and fatigued soldiers, many of them lost from their units and wandering aimlessly.

In the southern section of government Spain, seven provinces below Franco's broad corridor to the Mediterranean, mass meetings were held in Madrid, Cuenca, Valencia and other towns to promise support to the Catalonians. The loyalists in the south faced almost insurmountable difficulties, however, in attempts to rush men or munitions by sea past Franco's blockade fleet.

Franco, determined to give the loyalists no rest, pushed four army corps of Moroccans, Navarrese and Italians north in the vanguard of his pursuit.

Insurgent hope of quickly ending the war in the north ran high because Franco has almost 300,000 veterans, all well-equipped and fed, to throw against the ragged and weary loyalists.

18 British Leaders Radio Plea To German People for Peace

London

of great importance, especially Britain's financial strength, which "so often has been a decisive influence and remains as important a weapon of defense as ever before."

Air Production Speeded

Air Minister Sir Kingsley Wood opened a new aircraft factory at Reading with the declaration that increasing production facilities probably would enable Britain to treble her supply of warplanes. Earl Stanhope, first lord of the admiralty, wrote in Home and Empire that Britain was building naval craft at the rate of one a week.

The radio appeal to Hitler and the German people by Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, Poet Laureate John Masefield, and 16 others, was believed to have been designed to influence Hitler's speech to the Reichstag Monday night.

At the same time the British Broadcasting Corporation increased its nightly news broadcast in German from 15 minutes to 30. This broadcast was started in the September crisis in a determined effort to get a news report to the German people.

In official quarters it was admitted Germany's rearmament program had reached an unprecedented pace, and a foreign office spokesman asserted Britain regarded the calling up of 60,000 Italian reservists this week as "abnormal."

Officials also showed displeasure over an exchange of greetings between Spanish insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco and Chancellor Hitler and between Franco and Premier Mussolini. The greetings strengthened the belief Hitler and Mussolini might establish themselves as Spain's masters.

Anticipate Nazis

Prime Minister Chamberlain is expected to make a vigorous foreign affairs declaration tomorrow night in a speech at Birmingham. The official medley of declarations on Britain's military might was seen as a plain warning to Germany and Italy and as an attempt to offset the effects of Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag speech Monday night.

Sir Thomas Inskip, minister for co-ordination of defense, is believed to have been asked to accept another post, and a new dominions secretary may be appointed to relieve Malcolm MacDonald, who now is heading both the dominions and colonies ministries.

Baron Chatfield, admiral of the fleet and former first lord of the admiralty, was mentioned as likely to succeed Inskip as defense co-ordination minister. Inskip, it was reported, may become dominions secretary.

Television Is Shown Here For First Time

Speaker Bankhead Talks of Weather and Press Club Feels Cold

Washington yesterday saw its first demonstration of television.

Representative William Bankhead, speaker of the House, was standing in front of the Agriculture Building, chatting with Bill Crago, N. B. C. announcer, about the cold. And a crowd of newspapermen, business executives, Government officers, were gazing at the Speaker's face as it appeared on the glass screens of the half dozen receiving sets in the National Press Building, watching his lips move, hearing his voice, seeing him shiver under his upturned coat collar and feeling that they, too, were standing on that windy street corner.

Every detail in the picture was clear. No blur, no confusion, no flicker, no distortion. The camera moved from one member of the little group to another; "panned" down the line of Government buildings along the Mall.

No sound was made by the spectators in the Press Club; the room was filled with the sounds of that street corner on the Mall. With all eyes glued to the screen, the spectators felt that they, too, were standing beside Representative Bankhead.

Representative Bankhead expressed his pleasure at being the first "guinea pig" of the demonstration. Asked if he thought the introduction of television cameras in Congress would have any effect on the government, he said, "it might make some of the members take their feet off the chairs, but I don't think it will have any appreciable effect on the patriotic work they are doing there."

Edith Rogers Speaks

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, the next to be interviewed, congratulated N. B. C. and the Radio Corporation of America, and promised that Congress would do what it could about the weather.

Representative Rayburn (Democrat), of Texas, and Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr., added their congratulations. Representative Martin declared he "couldn't conceive what it would mean to the world." But Congress, he thought, "will readjust itself" if it has to deliberate under the eyes of televiewers.

The sight-and-sound broadcasts, which will take place at 10-minute intervals from 11 a. m. to 3:30 p. m. daily through Tuesday, are sent from the "telemobile station," designated as Station W2XBT, which consists of two specially built motor trucks containing a complete telecasting unit. Pictures and sounds are sent through the ether by special directional beam to the receiving sets in the National Press Building in the same manner as standard television broadcasts.

The telemobile unit, the first of its kind ever to be made, was designed for field work in connection with the N. B. C. television studio in Radio City, New York. Its original purpose was to relay outdoor scenes to the studio for rebroadcast, and it is now making its first appearance outside New York.

Seccombe Urges Taxes on Revenue Of Parking Lots

"Put out with the high cost of parking," Representative Seccombe (Republican), of Ohio, new member of the House District Committee, yesterday demanded a revaluation of parking lot property here and said he would fight any attempt to discontinue the use of parking meters.

"Parking costs are exorbitant, and the lots are taxed only as unimproved property. They should have a new valuation based on their revenues. Businesses adjoining parking lots are required to pay more taxes and receive less returns," he declared.

Parking meters are much less expensive to the motorist than the lots, he asserted, and said he would recommend the "experimental period" be continued beyond June 30.

"I don't think they've been given a fair trial here yet, and I firmly believe they will work out. Furthermore, I'm inclined to believe it's the parking lot owners who are fighting a fair trial for them," he declared.

Anne Lyddane Denies Owing $565

Mrs. Anne Lyddane, blonde former bank clerk freed more than two years ago of charges of plotting to murder her husband, testified yesterday in Municipal Court she never offered to pay J. Newton Baker, of the 1800 block of M street northwest, for testifying in her defense.

Baker sought $565 for services as a document expert for Mrs. Lyddane. Judge Nathan Cayton took the case under advisement.

Mooney Pledges Aid For Jailed Strikers

The C. I. O. said yesterday that Tom Mooney had pledged himself to help win freedom for nine members of the United Shoe Workers of America, facing five-month jail terms in Maine, on charges of violating an ancient statute of "conspiring to injure the business" of the Charles E. Cushman Shoe Co. The nine were denied pardons January 25.

3 Men Arrested As Blackmailers Of Peter Arno

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 27.—Peter Arno, the caricaturist who has been a central figure in many a cafe society incident, today found himself the center of an alleged extortion plot in which three men were arrested.

Arno said one of them had approached him yesterday with an obscene photograph, allegedly portraying Arno, and indicating a reward was in order for its return.

The three men, held in $10,000 bail each, on charges of attempted extortion, gave their names as Paul Wickolm, 32, superintendent of an East Side apartment house where Arno formerly lived; George Pusacy, 30, and John Wingate, 30.

Vermont Dispute Deal Proposed

Montpelier, Vt., Jan. 27 (A.P.).—An exchange of letters by Gov. Aiken (Republican), and the War Department would be the basis of a proposed compromise for a settlement of the flood control dispute between Vermont and the Federal Government, the Governor disclosed today.

Aiken said that under a plan suggested by Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, the Governor would write the War Department proposing the State retain jurisdiction over the dam and lands at the site, although it would be federally owned. An answering letter from the War Department would assent, according to the plan.

Quota Exemptions Urged for Small Wheat Farmers

A conference of about 50 wheat growers recommended yesterday that Congress exempt farmers producing less than 200 bushels of grain from marketing control provisions of the farm act. About half the 1,500,000 farmers who grow wheat in the United States come within this category.

Conference leaders said farmers who would be exempted normally produce only about 100,000,000 bushels of the Nation's average crop of about 750,000,000 bushels. Most of their wheat supplies their own food and stock feed needs and does not enter the market as a price factor, they said.

St. Mark's. "The Inner Life" will be the sermon theme of the Rev. J. Luther Frantz at the morning service.

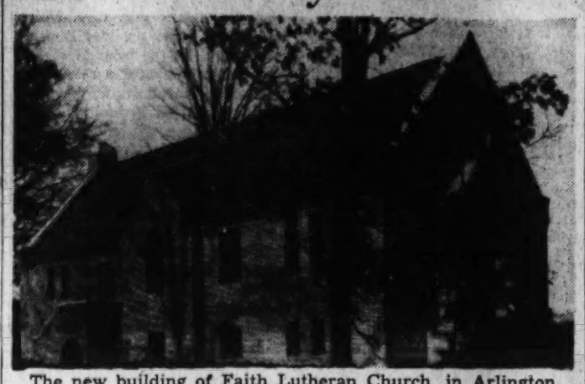
The Rev. Edward E. Richardson, philosopher, doctor and minister, tomorrow will celebrate the completion of 26 years in the Congress Heights Baptist pulpit.

From 1911 until 1913 he studied at Crozier Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.

He was recently elected for the twenty-ninth consecutive year president of the District of Columbia Society for Philosophical Enquiry and was thrice editor of the organization's memoirs.

Faith Lutherans to Celebrate Sixth Anniversary Tomorrow



The new building of Faith Lutheran Church, in Arlington, which was dedicated a year ago

Pastor to Speak on 'Debt That's Never Paid' and Receive New Members; Two More Church Units to Be Built Soon

Reaching another milestone in its brief career, Faith Lutheran Church, of Arlington County, tomorrow will celebrate the sixth anniversary of its founding and the first anniversary of its dedication. It is affiliated with the American Lutheran Synod.

Highspots of the occasion will be an address at 11 a. m. by the Rev. George J. Grewenow, pastor, on "The Debt That's Never Paid," and a reception for new members. A joint Senior-Junior Luther League "fellowship supper" is slated at 6:30 p. m., with G. Vernon Hanna speaking on "Stewardship in the Life of Youth."

Topping it off will be a birthday party Tuesday night, for which a program is being arranged under the direction of Mrs. John A. Marsh, general chairman, and Mrs. William Jones, social chairman.

Mr. Grewenow (pastor)

Participating in the affair will be, of course, the new church officers who took charge this month, including Vestrymen O. A. Nelson, who is also congregation president; J. A. Mash, A. Hough, E. C. Krahnke, O. L. Evenson, S. M. Bestul, H. Chenoweth, G. V. Hanna and R. Myers.

Women of the congregation also will have their inning, including the Ladies Aid Society, led by Mrs. Walter Williams, and consisting of Mrs. E. W. Rauth, vice president; Mrs. Matilda Conrad, secretary; Mrs. Hubert Thompson, treasurer, and Mrs. John A. Marsh, assistant secretary. The Ruth Hepner Chapter of the Women's Missionary Society, also led by Mrs. Williams, will take part. Other officers are Mrs. Conrad, vice president and treasurer, and Mrs. H. B. Hartung, secretary.

E. C. Krahnke

Youth will be represented by the Senior Luther League, of which Henry K. Graul is president, and including as other officers Marguerite Jackson, vice president; Ethel Schoen, secretary, and Maurice Dugard, treasurer. The juniors are led by Carl R. Fuss, jr., assisted by Leticia Robins, vice president; May Graul, secretary, and Doris Cooley, treasurer.

With the memory of the dedication of the first church unit still fresh in their minds, Faith Lutherans already are anticipating completion within five years of the two remaining units—the educational building and the main church auditorium.

At the present rate of progress that aim should be reached, for in 1938 the congregation paid off more than $1,400 on the church debt without using any system of pledges or money-making projects, which, according to the Rev. Mr. Grewenow, is quite remarkable. During the same period, other voluntary contributions brought $5,000, although the budget called for only $3,000.

C. A. Nelson (president)

The purchase of a $1,500 organ for the present unit, known as the "Founder's Chapel," is a 1939 project, says the pastor, who during the last year launched several unique organizations within the church. One is the Wednesday Evening Adult Hour, a period of Bible study and discussion. Its purpose is to emphasize the life of Christ as an approach to modern day problems. The period also includes a fellowship hour and refreshments.

Carl R. Fuss (youth leader)

The Rev. Mr. Grewenow, who was called to Faith Lutheran Church in 1934, while services were being held in the Ashton Heights Clubhouse, is an active civic as well as religious worker, being affiliated with the Arlington Lions Club and the Arlington County committee on religious education.

At present he is serving as one of three general chairmen of the Washington Lutheran Inner Mission roll call, in which his church is taking an active part under the direction of Mrs. Emil C. Krahnke, of the Women's Missionary Society.

The pastor, just turned 30, studied at St. Paul, Minn., and at Capital University, Columbia, Ohio. He served an assistant pastorate in Detroit from his graduation in June, 1934, until October, 1934, when he was called here.

Chevy Chase. "Looking in the Mirror" will be the subject of Dr. J. Hillman Hollister's discourse at morning worship.

Bethesda. The guest speaker at evening worship will be Dr. Philip Price, M.D., of Tsinan-fu, China. Due to the crowds, the present system of double morning services, at 9 and 11 a. m., will be continued, with the Rev. J. L. Parkes preaching on "A Royal Deed."

Falls Church. "How Shall We Know God?" will be the sermon subject of the Rev. Dr. Alton B. Altfather at 11 a. m.

Gunton-Temple. Dr. Bernard Braskamp, pastor, will use as his sermon subject in the morning, "The Centrality of the Cross."

Youth in Capital Churches

The young people of three churches here—Ninth Street Christian, First M. P. and Dumbarton Avenue Methodist—will take over one or both services tomorrow, planning both spiritual and temporal programs.

Ninth Street's two services will conclude its annual youth month. The morning hour will be featured by a sermon from the Rev. Ernest Bryan, pastor of Rockville Christian Church, on "What Next for Youth?" Hugh Carper, jr., will preside, assisted by Richard Swift, Eleanor Simmons, Virginia Elliott, James Moudy and Ernest Payne.

In the evening there Sarah Ann Harrison will lead the program. Ernest Payne will direct the songs and Maurice Hughes will be at the organ. Others to participate are James Driskill, Alta Lewis and Raybern Keagy. A drama, "The Lost People," will replace the sermon. Directed by Naomi Hewitt, the cast includes Betty Wray, Kathryn LaPlace, Albert Landgraf, Elmer Whitney, Allan Grove, Lydia Goss and Virginia Whitney.

Child labor will be the topic in the evening tomorrow when youth has its say at Dumbarton Avenue. Evelyn Leigh will discuss how child labor began; Louise Leigh will tell where child labor is profitable; Paul Berry will describe what is being done about it, and Isabel Prosner will outline just what is happening to these boys and girls. Others who will take part in the service, of which Walter Beall will be leader, include Catherine Poole, Beverly Bissett, Walter Lund, June Bissett and Edwin Summers.

Young ladies will come first on the program of young people's day at First M. P., taking charge of the Sunday school worship service. The young ladies involved are Audrey McPhearson, Mildred Watts and Marion Rock. At 11 a. m. the Rev. A. F. T. Raum, minister, will speak on "What Is Man?"

Man's capabilities in one line may be shown at the evening service, which young men of the church will conduct. Irving Oliff will be in charge, assisted by Grover Dare and Howard Rock. Two more, George Miles and Evan Compher, son of a former minister of the church, will be guest speakers.

"Henpeck Holler Gossip," "Imagination" and "Buddy Answers an Ad." Not captions for comic strips but titles of plays are these. They are the three one-acters to be presented in competition next Friday night at the Lutheran Church of the Atonement by the Ladies Bible Class, the Intermediate Luther League and the Senior Luther League, respectively.

Waiving advertising rates in behalf of Publicizer Doris Hinsch, we reveal what she has kept unintentionally a secret so far—names of those concerned. Directors of the plays are Mrs. Borden (doesn't she have any first name, Doris?), Margaret Nordby and Walter Baumgartner, who each think their production is going to walk off with the blue ribbons.

Members of the casts are Mrs. Rossa, Mrs. Rapp, Mrs. Robins, Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Huttel, Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Hollingsworth, Mrs. McGrory, Mrs. Reigel and Gloria Robins, for the Bible class. Billy Long, Edmund Ellis, Mildred Thayer, Jean Wannall and Pauline Saure will perform for the Intermediates and Rudy May, Georgianna Fillmen, Madeline Bawell, Jimmy Faris, Dora Gibson, Walter Baumgartner (versatile, that director) and Bill Trible.

These three superproductions can be seen for the small fee of 25 cents—Take it away, Nelson Bell!

Miss Hinsch has come through with one more gem, outside the drama, which should be equally entertaining. Tomorrow before the Luther League, Martin McGrory, president of the Lutheran Men's Brotherhood, will speak on "The Habits of the Chimorrans in the Island of Guam." Thanks, Doris, for that one.

Farther down town, at 6 p. m. in New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, D. E. Balch, of the FBI, will be addressing the Lincoln Fellowship Forum of that church on "Crime in a Christian Land." Wonder if that's about Guam too.

Relapsing into drama again, it must be noted that Calvary Methodist Dramatic Club is presenting tomorrow at the 8 p. m. service a religious play entitled "Fragments of God." Directed by John Meininger, this production will be enacted by Robert Black, Finley Cheston, Raymond Swan, Glenn Dell, Paul Schnell, Roland Sanner, Miss Twila, Miss Ruth and Miss Eva Agee, Miss Dorothea Eicholz and Mrs. Raymond Swan.

The Covenant-First Presbyterian Fellowship, which reports its average attendance has jumped from 100 a few months ago, to 135, is to entertain in honor of its "alumni" Tuesday at 8 p. m. in its Fellowship House, as part of its program for Christian Endeavor Week.

Japan Trapped In China War, Veteran Says

Former Officer in 8th Route Army Tells of Chiang's Strategy

Japan, despite spectacular advances across the Chinese mainland, is trapped in a "vicious circle" in the Far Eastern war.

Scott-O'Flannaggan

That is the judgment of a 24-year-old Irish-American, Thomas Joseph WellingtonScott-O'Flannaggan, who fought as a lieutenant colonel with the famed Eighth Route Army of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's forces.

Chinese Prolonging War

"The Chinese strategy from the start has been to prolong the war, draw the Japanese in and spread them out," Scott-O'Flannaggan said here yesterday. "As this goes on, the Japanese financial and industrial situation grows more critical, the Chinese conserve their manpower by avoiding a mass battle with the main body of Japanese forces, and it becomes more likely that Japan eventually must withdraw."

Wounded in Hip

Scott-O'Flannaggan now lives at 320 East Capitol street. Born in County Clare, Ireland, he studied two years at Trinity College, Oxford, before traveling to China in 1935. He was a buyer for a Shanghai exporting firm dealing in jade and curios. After his employer's business was ruined by the war, Scott-O'Flannaggan enlisted in the Chinese army in January, 1938. A bullet in the hip ended his service.

Barcelona's Fall Doesn't End War, De los Rios Says

The fall of Barcelona is far from the end of the Spanish war, Dr. Fernando de los Rios, the Spanish Ambassaddor, declared yesterday.

"During the Napoleonic wars Spain was confined to one city in the south: Cadiz. Yet the war went on. For four years we struggled against Napoleon; then came the help of England and Napoleon was driven out of Spain.

"In order to see clearly the significance of the retreat from Barcelona, every one must ask himself whether that retreat is exclusively our retreat. Or is it also the retreat of the many other nations that have forced us to make it, because they have deprived us of our rights—our unquestionable rights in international justice?"

President Roosevelt told a press conference yesterday the attitude toward the Government by members of Secretary Hopkins' business advisory council was very good. The President conferred with several members of the council yesterday after they had met Hopkins.

Several of the industrialists, after their two-day "get acquainted" session, echoed, Chairman W. Averell Harriman's report that they were "encouraged" by their contact with the new Cabinet officer.

Pupils Warned On Enrollment

Pupils desiring admittance to public high schools for the term beginning February 6 should report to the principal of the nearest high school during the week of January 30, it was announced yesterday.

Applicants must present a certificate of honorable dismissal from the last school attended, as well as a statement of credits and birth and vaccination certificates.

Court Bars Extradition Of Md. Holdup Suspect

Chicago, Jan. 27 (AP).—Federal Judge Michael L. Igoe overruled today a Government motion to remove John F. Haggerty, 48, a former convict, to Baltimore, Md., to stand trial on a charge of bank robbery.

Judge Igoe ruled the evidence purportedly connecting Haggerty with the robbery of the Citizens Bank of Keedysville, Md., on February 2, 1938, was insufficient to warrant his removal from Illinois.

Welles Calls Peace Major New Deal Aim

Welles

"The people of the United States and their Government have always maintained, and in practice have made it clear, that they assert the right to protest and to condemn the cruel and inhuman treatment of human beings wherever such brutality occurs.

"They have likewise made it clear that they possess and will avail themselves of the right to protest, or, if need be, challenge the foreign policy of any other nation which threatens the peace or security of the United States, or which results in the violation of the treaty rights of the United States or one of its nationals."

The Undersecretary said the Administration's foreign policy had other "highly important objectives" in addition to peace but they were "supplementary to the fundamental objective . . . that the people of the United States be kept at peace and that they be permitted to live their lives in a peaceful world."

Lists Objectives

Among the objectives of the foreign policy Welles listed: "The developing and strengthening of our friendly relations with other powers; the improvement of commercial opportunities for American trade abroad; the maintenance of the legitimate interests and treaty rights of American nationals in foreign countries; the re-establishment of the reign of international law to supersede the rule of force; the reduction and elimination of economic barriers to international trade, and the limitation and reduction by international agreement of military and naval armaments."

"It is apparent to all," he said, "on every hand, outside the western hemisphere, hostilities, military or economic, are either threatened or are in actual progress. And the threat alone, as we all know, often suffices for an aggressor to achieve his ends without resort to open violence."

Speaking of the neutrality legislation, Welles agreed with President Roosevelt in the President's message to Congress that "we have learned that when we deliberately try to legislate neutrality, our neutrality laws may operate unevenly and unfairly—may actually give aid to an aggressor and deny it to the victim. The instinct of self-preservation should warn us that we ought not to let that happen any more."

Cites Japan's Abrogations

In the Far East, he declared, "we are confronted with a difficult situation and a perplexing problem," although he said the Government's policy there is in no way different from the foreign policy in general.

"One country is endeavoring by armed force to impose its will on a neighboring country," he said. . . .

"It has to all intents and purposes given notice that it will henceforth be bound by treaty provisions only insofar as it may find it convenient to be bound.

"The Government of the United States does not admit that any country has the right arbitrarily to abrogate the treaty rights of the United States."

On the other hand, he cited the "gratifying and beneficial results" of the Administration's good neighbor policy in its dealing with other American republics.

He said Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade agreement policy "will prove to be one of the greatest contributions this country will have ever made to the cause of world recovery and of world peace. . . ."

Roosevelt Defends Plane Sale To France as Aiding Production

Plane

but went on to say that since many American plane factories were idle, it would be a good thing if they accepted French orders and got their machinery geared up to start the American air-expansion program as soon as it is approved by Congress. He said the matter had been considered by the Cabinet.

Questioned about the presence of a French observer on the Douglas plane, the President said the plane had not been accepted by the Government and no decision would be reached on this point for several months. War Department officials stated later the craft would be considered with products of other manufacturers in an award to be made in March.

While reluctant to discuss the matter, Army officers indicated that the Douglas ship embodied the latest designs and therefore they would not be apt to favor a foreign country receiving quantity deliveries at the same time that it, or a similar type, was being furnished our Air Corps.

They explained that, while there is no legal bar against sale of new planes aboard, unless the Government is buying them, manufacturers usually co-operate by not selling the latest models.

Navy Aid Is Mystery

In an attempt to pin down whether or not the War Department at first opposed demonstration and sale of the plane, Gen. Malin Craig will be questioned directly on the point today. Efforts to establish responsibility for this yesterday led to raised voices and spirited argument behind the committee's doors.

Some mystery surrounded the status of Capt. Sidney M. Kraus, U. S. N., in the negotiations with the French. While it was denied this Government was directly aiding the mission, Senator Sheppard said that Capt. Kraus, chief of material section of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, had "been assigned to the Treasury Department to assist in the project."

In connection with the Government's part in the matter, it was recalled that a conference was held at the White House January 16, attended by Secretaries Morgenthau and Woodring, Ambassador Bullitt, Undersecretary of the Treasury Hanes, Assistant Secretary of War Johnson, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Edison and Capt. Kraus. It was stated at the time the meeting was "on the defense program."

Senator Sheppard said that the military committee had decided to go into the general question of aircraft manufacture and export of planes, with a view to determining whether stricter laws are necessary to protect American military secrets.

Unable to approach German plane production rates, the French government is taking emergency measures in aircraft abroad. Negotiations are under way for purchase of 600 planes in the United States, a quantity equal to the United States Army's normal annual program.

One hundred Curtiss pursuit planes, identical to the United States Air Corps' "P-37," except for retractable landing gear, which the War Department refused to release for export, are now being delivered. An additional 100 of the type was ordered last week and a third is contemplated by the French air ministry.

300 Bombers Sought

In addition, the French mission in this country wants to buy 300 of the Douglas two-engined attack bombers of the type which crashed in California with a member of the mission aboard. Negotiations have been conducted with other American plane manufacturers, but the Curtiss and Douglas types were held more suitable to French needs. France desires a bomber similar to its own Amiot "370," which has a top speed of 310 miles an hour, a "ceiling" of 32,800 feet, and a range of 4,350 miles with 4,400 pounds of bombs, it is said.

In his request for immediate appropriation of funds to initiate the new defense program, the President proposed that $46,442,829 be provided for 565 new combat airplanes, $1,490,071 for radio equipment for the craft and $2,067,100 for guns to equip them.

Another national defense development yesterday was introduction of a resolution by Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, to create a temporary joint Congressional committee to determine defense policy and study means of co-ordinating Army and Navy activities. The chairmen and ranking minority members of the Senate and House committees on foreign affairs, military affairs, naval affairs and militry nd nvl ppropriations would make up the body.

Base Cost, $237,000,000

With Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook, chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, as witness, the House Naval Committee continued examination of the Administration proposal to establish air bases at Guam and 11 other key points in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. For the first time th ecommittee turned its main attention from the controversial Guam project and considered other phases of the program.

Admiral Cook declared the $65,000,000 bill would provide permanent bases in Alaska and the mid-Pacific for more than 400 longrange patrol planes. He stressed the importance of the proposed developments at Kodiak, Alaska, and Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii.

The Amlie Appointment

Following adoption by the Wisconsin Legislature of a resolution denouncing Thomas R. Amlie as a Communist and urging President Roosevelt to withdraw his name, a Senate sub-committee has been authorized to hold public hearings on his appointment to the ICC.

There is need for a searching inquiry to determine whether Mr. Amlie has any qualifications whatever for the post to which he has been appointed. Certainly he lacks the technical knowledge that a member of the commission should have in order to be useful. He has not even acquired legislative experience in the transportation field which might have given him an understanding of the problems of the railways. And now the Wisconsin legislators and other critics are asserting that his political and social outlook make him utterly unacceptable as a member of a commission which to some extent determines the fate of an industry in which a vast amount of capital is invested.

In considering Mr. Amlie's fitness for the post to which the President has elevated him, it is immaterial whether he is a Communist or a radical of less pronounced stripe. The fact of chief importance is that he is an avowed advocate of government ownership of the railroads as well as other basic industries. That bias should automatically disqualify him to serve on a commission appointed to regulate a privately owned and controlled railway system—one whole private character the law assumes and seeks to preserve.

Representative Bolles hit the nail squarely on the head when he rose to address the House on the subject of Mr. Amlie. "The ICC," he said, "believes in privately owned lines. Mr. Amlie does not believe in privately owned lines. . . . This is not a question of personal integrity," he continued. "It is a question of placing a man in one of the great independent agencies of the Government to administer its affairs and sit in judgment on technical questions of transportation, with opinions expressed in advance, hostile to the established order of our Government. It is a paradoxical situation which we seldom meet—that a man so mentally out of harmony with a job could be given cheering assistance from the appointing power."

Unless President Roosevelt has reasons for the appointment not yet divulged, one is forced to conclude that he acted in a strangely irresponsible manner. In face of the mounting volume of well-founded protests an explanation is assuredly due. Silence on the part of the President would undoubtedly stiffen Senate opposition to confirmation of the Amlie appointment.

Friendly Iran

As a result of the recent visit to Iran by Wallace Murray, chief of the Division of Near Eastern Affairs of the Department of State, diplomatic relations between the United States and that very progressive nation of the Middle East have now been fully restored after a lapse of three years.

Relations between the United States and Iran have always been friendly and mutually profitable. But the relative remoteness of Iran from this country has obscured from American eyes the remarkable advances made by her under the leadership of Reza Shah Pahlevi. We have been much better informed regarding the great progress made by Iran's neighbor, Turkey, under the late Kamal Attaturk. Yet Reza Shah Pahlevi has done no less for his ancient country than Attaturk did for his and despite even greater obstacles. Though its history goes back into dim antiquity, the country once known as Persia is today a thoroughly modern nation.

Under Reza Shah Pahlevi, for instance, women have been unveiled, the political power of the clergy has been curbed, progress made in popular education. The nation's economic progress as well as its determination to avoid dependence on foreign nations is illustrated by the fact that without a single dollar or pound of foreign capital Iran recently completed a railroad from the Caspian to the Persian Gulf. A remarkable engineering feat, considering the great difficulties of the terrain, its cost is estimated at $150,000,000.

In the field of foreign relations, Iran has demonstrated its peaceful spirit by signing the famous pact of non-aggression with Turkey, Irak and Afghanistan. For this notable accomplishment major credit is due Reza Shah Pahlevi. The pact is in the spirit of the Briand-Kellogg pact and won the commendation of Secretary Hull.

Italy's Victory

The fall of Barcelona bids fair to have much the same relationship to Italy's Mediterranean ambitions as the Czecho-Slovak crisis and the Munich meeting had to Germany's dream of hegemony in eastern and central Europe. It marks the penultimate stage in a process of intimidation of the democratic powers, particularly France, the ultimate state of which may prove to be the expansion of Italy's empire at the expense of France.

Two months ago, when an obviously inspired demonstration occurred in the Italian Chamber of Deputies in favor of the annexation of Tunisia, Corsica, Nice and Savoy, it appeared to most observers that Mussolini was reaching for the moon. French statesmen declared in unmistakable terms that France would rather fight than cede an inch of her territory to Italy. To underline this determination, Premier Daladier made an ostentatious visit to Corsica and Tunisia. The clamor in Italy subsided. But now, following the occupation of Barcelona by Spanish Nationalist and Italian troops, the Italian demands for Tunisia and other French territories have been revived and with redoubled force. This time they are far less fantastic.

The point is that the impending victory of the Spanish Nationalists is basically an Italian victory, made possible by a continuous flow of arms and munitions to the Franco forces and by the actual intervention of Italian troops in the fight against the loyalists. Mussolini himself says so. "Gen. Franco's magnificent troops," he told shouting crowds outside the Palazzo Venezia on Thursday, "and our fearless legionnaires, not only have beaten Negrin's government but many others of our enemies are now biting the dust."

It was precisely to inhibit the kind of intervention which Italy and Germany have carried on in behalf of Franco that France, with Great Britain's eager support, sponsored the nonintervention agreement of 1936. France could view a victory of either side in Spain with relative equanimity. A victory achieved with outside support, be it German and Italian on behalf of the insurgents or Russian on the side of the loyalists, was another matter. Yet when the breakdown of the nonintervention plan became apparent, France refused to change her course. She clung to nonintervention and in so doing helped contribute to the Nationalist-Italian victory which now rises to plague her.

Certainly Mussolini will capitalize his Spanish victory for all it is worth. It gives him an ally and a possible foothold on the southern flank of France. In a marked degree it increases Italy's power to intimidate that republic and there is no reason to believe that Hitler will lift a finger to restrain his ally. The opposite is more probable. Munich was a German victory achieved with Italian support. The triumph of Franco in Spain is an Italian victory made possible with German support. In contrast with the weakness displayed by the European democracies in the face of pressure from the totalitarian powers, the Berlin-Rome axis has operated with the precision of a well-oiled machine, moving easily from victory to victory.

It is not surprising, under the circumstances, that the latest developments in Spain have enormously increased the alarm in Paris and London. But while their will to resist further capitulations to the dictators shows signs of growing, their capacity to resist is now weaker than it was before Munich and before Barcelona.

The German Way

The latest exchange of notes between the United States and Germany in regard to Austrian indebtedness to this country shows how unbridgable is the gulf that separates the policies of the two nations.

The Germans calmly refuse to recognize any legal responsibility for the Austrian obligations and leave entirely out of consideration the Austrian relief debt owing to our government. However, they state that they are prepared to consider an arrangement with private creditors, provided account is taken of the "prevailing passivity of the German trade balance with the United States." Just how much more we would have to buy from Germany in order to make it worth her while to negotiate with the holders of Austrian dollar bonds is not stated.

At any rate, it is clear that Germany clings to the thesis that debt adjustments should depend upon the size of the merchandise balances which she obtains from trade with a particular creditor state. In other words, if she sold more to the United States than she bought from this country, she would be prepared to deal more generously with American creditors. Since she buys more in our markets than she sells here, however, she contends that she has no means of satisfying American creditor demands.

Of course, there is truth in the contention that a hard-pressed debtor country cannot pay unless it is able to accumulate funds by sales of its goods abroad or by loans. Lacking foreign loans, Germany is thrown back upon her export trade as a means of accumulating exchange. However, it does not follow that an adverse trade balance with a single country is evidence of inability to pay debts owing to the nationals of that particular country. It is the state of the trade balance with the outside world, not with any one country, that is a gauge of a nation's ability to meet its external obligations.

Having acquired a reputation as a defaulter, the Berlin government no doubt concludes that it has little to lose by refusing to pay whenever payment can be avoided without danger of reprisal. Hence, our citizens are discriminated against. We are in no position to force a debt settlement by threatening to sequester balances, even if we were disposed to follow such a course.

We are still talking the language of those vanished days when governments regarded defaults on foreign indebtedness as a prime misfortune to be avoided at any cost. But today the authoritarian state wanting to free itself from dependence upon the outside world regards foreign indebtedness as an incubus from which it seeks to emancipate itself by any means at its command.

Civil Rights Upheld

The majority opinion handed down by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in the Hague-C. I. O. case is properly hailed by counsel for the Civil Liberties Union as a "great victory for the right of free speech and free assembly." It is undoubtedly a notable opinion, not merely because of its unsparing indictment of the Hague regime, but also because of its frank exposure of the subterfuges by which the authorities attempted to take away civil rights guaranteed under the Constitution. This readiness of the courts to look below the surface of things to determine their real substance is the best possible safeguard against the machinations of politicians like Mayor Hague.

A system of government under which freedom of speech and of assembly is guaranteed calls for more than lip service if its benefits are to be preserved. Realizing that fact, the majority judges based their conclusions upon a candid examination of the record of the Hague political machine in its efforts to suppress the C. I. O. Superficially viewed there appears to be nothing inherently unreasonable in a city ordinance authorizing the director of public safety to refuse to permit outdoor gatherings if disorders are feared. But when permission is denied to the C. I. O. and granted to other groups, the Constitution is flagrantly violated.

Such discriminatory action, together with the evidence that Mayor Hague and his associates had inspired public protests against C. I. O. meetings, led the court to conclude that under the guise of preventing disorders, the ordinance had been used to suppress the rights of free speech and free assembly. That leaves Mayor Hague without a leg to stand on.

"The record shows," says the court, "that the appellees (the C. I. O) and their sympathizers were not permitted to speak because they were deemed to be undesirables by the city authorities. The cries of impending riot raised by the appellants are not candid. In other words, Mayor Hague and his associates, reversing the usual procedure, troubled the waters in order to fish in them."

Forcible deportations of C. I. O. sympathizers by the police and searches and seizures without adequate cause are also denounced as defiance of that due process of law guaranteed by the Constitution. A city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of handbills and printed matter in streets and public places is likewise held to be invalid because it violates fundamental civil rights of freedom of speech and the press.

The court's insistence upon examining the record to determine the underlying purposes and effect of the actions taken by Jersey City's rulers is most encouraging. If our courts generally follow this practice, we shall have little reason to fear that our right to speak freely, write freely, and meet together for free exchange of opinions will be impaired.

The great majority of Americans place too high a value on these privileges consciously to surrender them without a struggle. The danger lies in surreptitious suppression of fundamental liberties by methods like those which Mayor Hague and his cohorts have brought to such a high degree of perfection, under the pretense of preserving the peace and safeguarding the welfare of Jersey City from the contamination of alien and radical ideas. So it is in cases of this sort that the courts can render their greatest service to the cause of civil liberty.

For Recognition of Franco

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just read your editorial in The Post of January 27 on "The Fall of Barcelona." Your statement, "the fall of Barcelona has settled the fate of republican Spain," has a note of finality about it that comes as a shock to one who has been consistently interested in the progress which the people of Spain are making toward a government under which free institutions would be fostered.

There certainly has been nothing notably "republican," and by that I mean representative government, in the Popular Front government in Spain. What has been settled by the fall of Barcelona is the fate of the Trojan horse strategy which was originated in Moscow and which put the Popular Front government in power in Spain in 1936. The result of this settlement will be to liberate the patriotic forces existing in Spain and set them once more on the road toward a truly national government that will be truly representative of all the people of Spain.

You say now that the fall of Barcelona will raise the issue of American recognition for the Franco regime. Recognition is the public acceptance of known facts. From your editorial it seems apparent that you are convinced that since the fall of Barcelona it is a fact that the Popular Front government in Spain has no longer any power to govern in Spain.

The fact is that the Franco government now exercises jurisdiction over three-fourths of the territory of Spain and over 20,000,000 of the 24,000,000 people of Spain and that over a period of more than two years this government has exercised jurisdiction and conducted affairs of state in the territory under its control in a just, orderly and masterful manner. The recognition of the Franco government at this time as the government of Spain is simply the acceptance of these facts.

The welfare of the Spanish nation is, of course, a humanitarian interest to us. We have a substantial interest in the conduct of international affairs and our welfare as a nation is involved in the conduct of international affairs from now on by the Franco government. To refuse in stubbornness and disappointment to recognize the de facto status of this government is to deny ourselves the right to be represented on a basis of international confidence before the Franco government.

It is, therefore, a refusal to cooperate with that government in its conduct of its international relations. What advantage this refusal would be to us, particularly in view of the statement you make with regard to Latin-American affairs, is altogether beyond my comprehension.

M. Blum's Visit

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The selection of Leon Blum, former Premier of France by virtue of Socialist and Communist support, to visit the United States for a speaking tour in favor of an alliance between this country, France, Great Britain and Russia, against Germany and Italy is extremely unfortunate. The American people are familiar with Mr. Blum's failure when in office to support sound financial and industrial policies, and the great majority is opposed to his socialistic views. His arrival will be hailed by the Socialists and Communists, who pretend to favor democracy, but who in reality advocate government by a dictatorship of the proletariat. The cause of international peace and good will will not be furthered by this visit.

Commercialized D. C.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After years of study and thought as to the minds and doings of our early American founders, who had to do with the setting aside of the District of Columbia as a place for our National Capital, we can hardly agree with the following words of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt: "Our forefathers may have had an idea that they were creating a good government for the District, but I am afraid that it doesn't work out that way."

Our forefathers were right in their ideals as to the District, and it is the politicians and money interests who have departed from their lofty ideals. We hardly think they had in mind the District of Columbia as it is today, but that their minds ran along the lines of a city beautiful, for the abode of our Government servants, rather than the commercialized city as we see it today.

They chose a site large enough where homes could be built with large and beautiful surroundings on all sides, different from commercial industrial cities as they are found in the States. Just a place for the National Capital, with the proper amount of business and industry to serve their needs. Not a place to come to make money such as we see it today, with each year more and more of the beauty disappearing.

The States were the places to make money in without letting people flock to the Capital for such purposes. Here was the place for beautiful lawns and out-door environments, with commodious homes in which the Federal servants could live in peace and comfort. The voting place of the dwellers in the District of Columbia was in their home States where their farms and businesses were to be found. Things here were to be entirely of a governmental nature, hence no need of voting.

It should make sad the heart of every true American to see and behold the claptrap, the slums, and the places of vice which our eyes have to look upon here in Washington. And there should be an earnest effort upon the part of all to return to the correct ideals of our American fathers, to clean up the city, ridding it of everything that does not make it the most beautiful capital city in the world. Our large new Governmental buildings stand in a class by themselves for beauty and grandeur, the excellence of the earth, but how about the city in general? D. PAUL ZIEGLER.

Jingoism?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Jingoism is on the way back. Soon we will be swamped with the same forces of unreasoning "patriotism" which pushed us into the war in 1917. I refer to the showing of a technicolor American flag and playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" in some of the neighborhood theaters.

For those of us who desire internationalism and believe in the possibilities of brotherly love in a political as well as a religious sense, the requirements of jingoism are a constant source of embarrassment. We cannot blindly worship a mere symbol and remain intellectually honest. Therefore in silent protest we cannot stand in a theater when this unnecessary attempt to make us war-conscious is thrown on the screen. L. WRAY CHOATE.

Mr. Amlie's Appointment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every American citizen who believes in preserving the American ideals of government has occasion to take alarm at the appointment of Mr. Amlie, of Wisconsin, as a member of the I. C. C.

Mr. Amlie introduced a resolution into Congress to amend the Constitution of the United States, which proposed amendment expressly stated that "The Congress shall have power to enact laws providing for the ownership, operation and management, through instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, of business, manufacturing, commerce, industry and banking, and shall have the power to purchase or condemn by eminent domain such enterprises."

That is 100 per cent communism, the same kind of communism that existed under the dictatorship of Lenin in Russia, but which has proven a failure under Stalin. Mr. Amlie sought to fasten Russia's repudiated communism upon the United States.

No wonder the voters of Wisconsin rejected Mr. Amlie at the recent primary election. No wonder the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Wisconsin Legislature yesterday, by an overwhelming vote, requested the President to withdraw his appointment from the I. C. C.

It is a very unusual procedure for the citizens and the legislators of a State to combine their efforts to reject one of the sons of their own State whom the President of the United States has appointed to a high Federal office. Nothing but a justifiable grievance and an assault upon a great American ideal could lead a whole State to repudiate Mr. Amlie under the circumstances. The President cannot afford to push the confirmation of this appointment in the face of this opposition without aligning himself on the side of communism.

Americans are not ready to sell out to communism. If Mr. Amlie possessed every other qualification to the nth degree, the indication that he favors the introduction of communism into our Federal Constitution and our Government is sufficient to disqualify him for any position by Presidential appointment. GEORGE JEFFERSON, JR.

Grand Slam for Charity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "America's Card Party" is to be held all over the country on February 14 next for the benefit of children's local charities. It is being sponsored in Washington by The Post to establish a blood and serum bank in the Children's Hospital.

As one of Washington's many contract bridge players, here is my plea to them:

Let us "open" our "hearts" and "spread" ourselves to "deal" a helping "hand" for the sake of the little ones who have known only the "bad breaks."

Forget to "duck" and be on "deck" prepared to "unblock" in the good cause. Just "hold-up" or "drop" everything on St. Valentine's Day and come to the "defense" of the underprivileged children. They are "trapped" and cannot "play." We have the "stoppers"—so why not "squeeze" in every way possible to "cash" for them some really "good tickets?"

[Editor's note—The Post has them for "distribution" at $1 each.]

Our "opponents" will be Messrs. Poverty and Disease and it will be a pleasure to "slam" those two "rags and tags" and toss them into the "discard."

Do not "pass" up a rare chance to "bid" for the happiness of the kids. This is our great opportunity to "lead" them out of the Valley of the Shadow of Death. It will be an "honor!"

Ivory Monopoly

THERE ARE various half-clad rumors running around the sports world that that little group of titans known as the New York Yankees, left orphaned by the death of Col. Jacob Ruppert, is about to be sold to this or that person.

As urchin rumors these reports will hurt no one. In all seriousness, however, the Yankees should be taken over by someone and that someone is the United States Government. On the question of governmental ownership of most industries, much can be said on both sides. But Government ownership of the Yankees, it seems to me, is so inevitably right that the matter need hardly be held open for rebuttal.

There are a number of sound and delightful reasons why there should be Government ownership of the Yankees. Disregarding the obvious, and perhaps unworthy one, that it would make the Saturday Evening Post awfully mad, one is struck forcefully with the fact that the Yankees, as at present constituted, are operating as a flagrant monopoly—a monopoly more flagrant, perhaps, than the American Medical Association is said by some to be.

Now if Mr. Frank Murphy plans to continue the work of his predecessor and run monopolies through the disassembly line, he could find no happier point of departure than the New York Yankees. No ghosts need rise to haunt him here in the pursuance of his sworn duties, for the baseball industry is the one industry on earth where the only strikes called are stand-up strikes.

If ever monopolies should be Government owned and controlled, then the United States has a clear path to ownership and control of the Yankees. No case of monopolistic practices has ever been more crystal clear. Pennant after pennant will flutter to the witness stand to testify before any Congressional committee which cares to subpena them. The monopoly is so obvious that it would be absurd to belabor the point of its proof.

The only argument which could possibly be advanced against Government ownership of the Yankees is that it might prove prohibitively costly to acquire them. Scrutiny, however, will show this argument neither sound nor valid.

It will be said, of course, that the present Congress feels no yen to liberalize anything, even the baseball industry, if such liberalization means further zipping open of the Government's purse zipper. But the initial cost of taking over the Yankees need not be so great as one might imagine, if the inheritance tax law were made slightly flexible with the interpretive aid of a few Federal bench-warmers.

Since the New York Yankees were one of the bequests in the will of Col. Ruppert, they would be subject to the operation of the inheritance tax law. Under this law, the greater the value of an estate, the greater percentage of the estate is collected by the United States Treasury. Certainly so far as baseball properties go, the Yankees are tops. The United States Treasury should be able to split the Yankees down the middle without parting with a cent, taking for itself Gehrig, Ruffing, Gomez, Dickey, Gordon, DiMaggio, a couple of second-string pitchers, a utility man and a pinch hitter. Doubtless after this, the president of the remaining Yankees would be willing to sell them at bargain prices. At least he would be discouraged and wouldn't hold out long. Old "Marse Joe" McCarthy could then be commissioned in the Army or the Navy and ordered to get to work managing the boys.

Under this procedure the project would not prove costly. The whole thing could be set up under the NYYA (New York Yankees Administration) and the Government would have an agency which would reflect real credit upon it.

The CCC could be used as a national baseball farm for recruiting new talent and, now that kidnapers are scarce, the G-men could be put to work as talent scouts, thus preserving the G-man pay roll virtually intact and at the same time giving Mr. Hoover the material for even richer memoirs, on the thrills of pursuing ivory talent.

No doubt there would be occasional Senatorial fights, over confirmation of the White House nominations of Joe Doaks as the new first baseman, Tony Tominelli as the new shortstop and Andy Conover as the new rightfielder, and from time to time the cry would naturally arise that "baseball should be taken out of politics!" or vice versa. But these, after all, are minor matters. Something of the sort goes on every day and, in any event, in this imperfect world of ours only the fools and the communists expect perfection. And even they don't expect it in our time.

For the Congressman who must spend his days and nights studying the complexities of TVA and power, the ramifications of relief, rail differentials, international relations and a host of allied intricacies, here is a subject which he and every Congressman can understand without research. Batting averages, games won and lost, earned runs per game, all these are an open book to him. And this is intended neither as cheap witticism nor as the criticism of a nagger and a carper. Rather it is a wholesouled and sympathetic yearning to see every Congressman win a pennant, bless his heart.

Income Tax as Weapon

THE TROUBLES of the income-tax payer long have been a source of crude mirth to those who like to jest at wounds, but the discussion has now taken a new turn. The President's proposal to tax the salaries of State, county and municipal employes and the income from securities issued by the States and their subdivisions is examined with suspicion as a cunning and shysteresque design of the Federal Government to destroy the States themselves.

Theoretically, Congress might attempt this by fixing the tax rate on the income from these securities at a prohibitive figure. Congress might also tax the income of churches, which now enjoy exemption not only as to contributions but also as to profits on commerce conducted by religious bodies. Congress might choke off contributions to the churches by refusing to permit deduction of such sums from the income of the donors. The income-tax amendment contains a power of mischief which was foreseen in part and viewed with alarm in some of the debates which preceded its adoption.

OF ITSELF, the present proposal obviously is no tax on the States or their subdivisions. When a Governor, mayor, judge or commissioner cashes his pay check the money is his and the tax burden falls on him, not his employer. Similarly, the owner of a bond, and not the authority which sold it to him, is the victim when the time comes to pay the tax on the income from it. There are those who frankly argue that the States, in the main, have failed to meet their responsibilities and, under the political temptations set forth by the New Deal, have become parasites on one another and that the vast and inefficient spread of taxing bodies within the States has become an unbearable burden.

The honest way to meet that issue would be to talk it out and vote it out on its merits, but the shyster mentality would not do it that way. The cunning way of creating changes, the way of Adolf Hitler, the way of our Communists and their fellow travelers, too, is to use an existing law to obtain results which were not intended by the law in the first place.

THE INCOME-TAX law never was intended as a weapon of political coercion, for example, but has been so used in the last few years and may yet be used for the same motive to destroy the native American press through pressure on the advertisers. The press could be killed off by a law disallowing as business expense the sums of money which advertisers spend to sell their goods. The income tax was not intended and not even the most cautious statesman foresaw that it might be used to kill the American press for criticizing the New Deal.

Nor was it intended to intimidate individuals in the exercise of their constitutional right to petition Congress, but last year Senator Minton, of Indiana, obtained from the White House authority to examine the income-tax returns of all citizens whom he might accuse of lobbying on an issue close to the heart of the Administration.

TO BE SURE, mere examination of an honest return should cause no embarrassment, but it has been observed that Senator Minton did not summon Jimmy Roosevelt, the President's son, as a lobbyist and that Jimmy did not exactly clamor for an opportunity to reconcile his claim of high ethics with his admission that he telegraphed to Warm Springs requesting good treatment for a guest of the President-elect who was important to him in a business way. Senator Minton himself, whose own tax return would be no less interesting than those of citizens who had the effrontery to petition the Congress which he adorns, did not set an example by throwing his own return on the table and demanding expert analysis by a bug hunter from the Internal Revenue.

The misuse of the tax returns has been conducted with political discretion, and the power which can be read into the amendment and ratified by an obedient Congress by shyster mental processes is unquestionably the power to destroy not only the States but the press, religious organizations and an economic system which is the object of ill-concealed contempt in some quarters in Washington today.

SURELY THERE was no original intention that high-salaried public employes should be exempt from the income tax or that millionaires should find it more profitable to invest in tax-exempt issues than to put their money to work in industry. The proposal to revoke this exemption is popular and fair, but a Huey Long or another New Deal come to power might try to use the income-tax amendment to abolish income altogether and with it American rights a million times removed from the original purpose.

America's Aerial Defense

WHEN, LAST SEPTEMBER, the European democracies with their superior land and sea strength sacrificed Czecho-Slovakia rather than risk a struggle with Germany and Italy, they yielded for one reason alone—the threat of Nazi-Fascist military aviation.

That fact has been so well recognized and often repeated that it has become trite. Yet its significance for the future can not be overstressed. The triumph of Adolf Hitler at Munich marked the new ascendancy of the air weapon in the arsenal of nations.

Old-line admirals and generals can argue—and argue convincingly—that no air force ever captured and held a position or cut off an enemy's commerce. In the last analysis the "inevitable" next war probably will be won or lost by the infantryman and the warship. But because of the ability of modern air forces to strike quickly and devastatingly at huge centers of population with frightful horror and ruin, the nation with the greatest aerial armada can exercise the most powerful and effective threat.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S recent message to Congress asking for $385,000,000 to build the United States air force up to approximately 6,000 serviceable military and naval airplanes is this country's answer to the debacle of Munich. It is America's tacit warning to the world that it is a formidible contender in the race for air power and, in defending its legitimate interests in the Western Hemisphere, it does not intend to be caught in a position where, like Great Britain, it must yield to the threat of terror from the air.

No definite date has been announced for reaching this strength, but it probably will be attained by 1942, when the U. S. fleet is scheduled to have full authorized tonnage. Meanwhile, of the $700,000,000 asked by the President in his special national defense message, the Navy will receive $42,000,000 for the improvement of old naval bases and the creation of new ones—including, probably, the controversial base at Guam—and $21,000,000 for planes.

CLEARLY, the most immediate problem is that of strengthening the Army Air Corps, which explains the fact that $300,000,000 is provided for that arm in comparison with the Navy's mere $65,000,000. It can be reliably predicted that the greater part of the Army's funds will go into the super-bomber and the P-40 pursuit ship mentioned earlier. Just how rapidly these can be produced no one in the War Department will predict. But existing private plants are being relied upon and there is no thought presently, at least, of the Government entering the aircraft business.

Numerically, the U. S. Air Corps, including Army and Navy forces, enters the world competition for power in fifth place among the great nations. Reliable aviation statistics are elusive today, for the strengths of the various powers shift rapidly from month to month. According to the best information available here, however, the number of effective military and naval airplanes now possessed by the leading contenders in the race for air supremacy is:

Germany	9,800
Great Britain	7,100
Russia	5,500
Italy	4,000
United States	3,500
Japan	3,100
France	2,700

THESE FIGURES, however, do not tell the whole story, for an air corps is judged not only by the quantity but also by the quality of its planes and fliers. And in the judgment of experts, the United States Air Corps ranks qualitatively higher than any in the world except the German. Indeed, the new XB-15 (super-flying fortress) bomber and the P-40 pursuit plane just developed by the Army Air Corps are said to match in performance the newest planes which the Germans have developed in those two categories. However, the German quantity production of the ships which correspond to these types is ahead of the American. In fact, only one of the super-bombers has been built here thus far. It has proved highly successful in the extensive tests which have been given it and a large number of similar planes undoubtedly will be ordered when money becomes available from the new appropriations.

Compared with the bombers of World War days, this new giant of the air would stand in the relation of a compound-mallet locomotive to the wheezy little Tom Thumb. Powered by four 1,000-horsepower motors, it is 90 feet long, 18 feet high, has a wing-spread of 150 feet and weighs more than 30 tons. It carries a veritable hornet's nest of machine guns for fighting off pursuit ships, six machine-gun replacements enabling its gunners to cover every point of the compass with a withering fire.

The speed and cruising range of the new bomber have not been officially announced, but it is understood to be capable of more than 225 miles per hour and to cover more than 3,000 miles nonstop. Thus, based on the Pacific Coast, a squadron of these ships easily could be transferred to air bases in Hawaii or the Panama Canal defense zone in less than a day.

GREATER SECRECY has surrounded the development of the P-40 pursuit ship than that of any other aircraft the United States has ever produced. The War Department refuses even to discuss is specifications, presumably because the keenest competition today is for the production of ultra-fast pursuit ships as the most effective weapon against bombers. Recent reports from Germany, however, described an advance type of fighter with such unprecedented speed and climbing ability as to enable it to take off, ascend to an altitude of 10,000 feet and land again in less than five minutes. And the P-40 is said to match or exceed the performance of any pursuit plane which Germany has built.

Unlike most nations, the United States maintains separate air corps in the Army and Navy rather than joining them in one unit. This system results from theory—contradicted by some officers—that the function of planes with the sea forces on one hand, and land forces on the other, are so distinct that they require an entirely different type of organization and training.

WHILE THE U. S. Army Air Corps lags quantitatively behind several European powers, the U. S. Navy Air Corps is regarded by common consent among experts as the most powerful in the world. Not only in material but also in the effectiveness of its organization and the quality of its pilots it stands far ahead of any other air force at sea. It was the first to develop the technique of "dive bombing" to the point where bombers became a real menace to warships at sea—which they had never been under the old lateral system—and its intricate co-ordination with the surface fleet has served as a pattern for other naval air arms.

The Navy now has 1,818 planes, scattered among naval bases, with the fleet and assigned to service with the U. S. Marines. The Vinson bill, passed last May, authorizes a naval air strength of 3,000 planes.

Under its present building program, the Army Air Corps will have a total of 2,320 planes by June 30. This considerable increase over the approximately 1,800 it now has will result from extensive orders presently being filled. Under the defense program now being considered by Congress, the Army expects to raise this to 3,337 planes. An increase of 2,200 flying officers and 25,000 enlisted men, as well as the improvement of existing air bases and the creation of five new ones, is contemplated.

By rule of thumb, air officers figure on a combat strength of 60 per cent of total strength. Hence the 6,000 planes envisaged under the present program will mean that the Army and Navy together will have a first-line fighting force of about 3,600 planes. The remainder will be training ships, transport planes, observation planes and other non-combat types.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

This European Crisis

THE SITUATION in Europe is being described as equal in gravity to the situation in September. It may be that it is. But in certain important respects it is a very different situation. For in September the British and the French democracies had to decide whether they would risk a war in which they would have to attack Germany and Italy. That is what supporting the Czechs would have meant. Today, Hitler and Mussolini have to decide whether they will risk a war in which they, rather than the French and British, would have to take the offensive. That is what getting Tunis or Corsica involves.

As a military and as a psychological problem the situation today is almost completely the opposite of what it was last summer.

IT IS, I believe, the settled opinion of all military men that in modern war on land a successful attack requires a superiority of perhaps as much as three to one in materials and in trained officers and reserves. The offensive is a terribly costly undertaking, especially against prepared positions and against troops fighting on their own soil and defending their homeland.

MOREOVER, since modern wars are fought by the whole population, the morale of the attacker—that is to say, his will to fight and his willingness to endure losses—must be much higher. His morale is harder to sustain than is that of the defender. In September the British and French peoples were not unitedly prepared to pay the price in blood and treasure of a military offensive. Had they gone to war, they would have been disunited from the start, and from the start they would have been asking themselves why they must die and have their cities devastated for the sake of the Czechs and the other small nations of central Europe. The diplomatists might tell them that in fighting for the Czechs they were fighting for their national interests. But what the ordinary man saw was that he and his son had to charge against the German army when Germany was not invading France.

The British and French gave way at Munich because their interest in central Europe was not plainly and indisputably great enough to guarantee the united willingness of their people to pay the price of a sustained military offensive over a long period of years.

IN THE present crisis the French certainly, and the British almost as certainly, are in a fundamentally stronger position than they were in September. If there is to be war, it is Mussolini and Hitler who have to attack, and they have to attack, not an ally of France, but France herself. That this is a very different matter may be judged from the fact that in September the French government never felt able to submit its position to the French Parliament; today M. Daladier and M. Bonnet have gone to Parliament and have received unanimous support. There can be little doubt that on the question of defending the French empire there is a solidarity in France which did not exist on the question of fulfilling the Czech alliance.

THE BRITISH position also is psychologically much stronger. The British are a maritime people, and wars on land over strategic positions in the interior of the continent are contrary to all their traditions. But they understand very well the necessity of sea power, and the importance of Spain, of Spanish Morocco, of the Balearic Islands and of Tunis, to the maintenance of their sea power. Under Marlborough, in the eighteenth century, and under Wellington, in the nineteenth century, they went to war to keep Spain independent, so that it could not be used as a base from which to attack their command of the seas. Moreover, just as the French have an easier military problem now, because they are on the defensive, so the British have an easier military problem, because they are acting in a region where their navy is capable of being used effectively.

AS AGAINST this it may be said that the British and French have lost the support of the Czech army and of loyalist Spain. It is by no means certain that these are net losses. The Czechs had a fine army. But that army was one thing if Germany attacked France; it was another thing if France had to attack Germany. For, if France had had to attack Germany, the Czechs would have been annihilated long before the French could have hoped to make a breach in the German lines. Given the superiority of the defensive, the Czech army could have helped little in a war of attack against Germany; in a war of attack by Germany now, the Germans have, to be sure, more troops available, but they would need many more troops than they did to hold the French in September.

AS FOR LOYALIST Spain, it has been more of a liability than an asset to the western democracies. For the civil war in Spain was a class war which profoundly divided French and British opinion. Whatever may have been the right policy two years ago, today there is little doubt, I think, that the British and French have acted wisely in refusing to prolong the civil war. Only in that way are they able to clarify their real interest in the Spanish question, which is that Spain should remain a genuinely independent nation. And in taking this position, they are likely to get more support among the Spanish people as a whole than they could possibly have gotten by helping Barcelona to resist.

IN ANY event, they really had no other choice. For what prevented them from assisting loyalist Spain was not, in the last analysis, the threat of Mussolini; it was the fact that intervention in the Spanish civil war would hopelessly have divided the French and the British at home. A democracy is a democracy; it cannot face great perils except on issues which unite the democracy. The civil war in Spain had to be removed as an internal issue in France and in Britain before the two nations could unite their peoples on the national issues which vitally concern them.

FOR THESE REASONS one is entitled, I think, to have faith that war can be averted in the present crisis. It all depends on whether Hitler believes that the British and French are as resolute as they seem to be. If he does, the chances are that he will not strike, and that he will restrain Mussolini. That will preserve the peace for the time being. If he thinks that the British and French are bluffing again, as he knew that they were last summer, he will probably take a position from which he cannot retreat; then if they are bluffing again, they will go to a second Munich. And that will preserve the peace.

The risk of war lies in the third possibility—that Hitler will think they are bluffing when in fact they are not. So if they are not bluffing, everything depends upon their ability to convince Hitler by their public words and by their public acts and by their confidential advices to him that this time they do mean what they say.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Vacationists' Lament

I.

The hotels' bills are frightful—
I'm taken for a ride;
With every hotel statement,
I'm made quite sick inside.
The tipping has me weary—
For passage home I'd yell
But for the paper's headline:
"NORTH HIT BY FREEZING SPELL."

II.

When orange juice I order
I'm billed for 40 cents;
The charge for bottled water
Stirs up a rage intense.
I'm robbed from every angle,
And homeward I would go
But for the news this morning:
"NORTH SWEPT BY RECORD SNOW."

III.

When I would go in bathing
The charges make me hot
And I am similarly
Upset when I would not.
A boat to rent for fishing
Costs 30 bucks a trip;
I'd quit, but for the item:
"NORTH HELD IN WINTER'S GRIP."

IV.

The horse and the doggies—
(I can't tell which are which)—
They take me, ah, for plenty
And leave me in the ditch;
The night life is terrific—
A Pullman home I'd seize,
But for the page 1 tidings:
"NORTHEASTERN STATES IN FREEZE."

V.

I draw some dough on Monday—
By Tuesday it is spent;
Into my little savings
This visit puts a dent;
I'd call it off, and quickly,
And homeward ride or sail
But for these pleasant tidings:
"NEW YORK IS SWEPT BY GALE."

VI.

The taxis here are costly;
I rented me a car,
But at a rate so steep that
I'm weeking at the bar.
Each move is so expensive
I'd homeward make my flight
But for that postcard saying:
"OUR PIPES FROZE UP LAST NIGHT."

England: Our Shield

By Mark Sullivan

Frank Recognition

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT at a press conference discussed the purchase by France of military airplanes from American factories. Mr. Roosevelt had a manner of justifying this against criticism. He said the Cabinet had discussed it and taken responsibility. He put the justification on the grounds that it gives employment to American workers, increases our foreign trade, and builds up our factory facilities for making airplanes for our own defense if and when we need them.

Mr. Roosevelt was, to use one of his own occasional phrases, 1000 per cent right. The extra 900 per cent of his rightness can be based on a broader ground. The incident offers opportunity to discuss one facet of the whole broad subject of neutrality and preparedness. It will be clearer to put the discussion in terms of England rather than France.

We in America are arming for defense. Defense of what? Defense of our soil and our lives to be sure. But in the present situation, we seek to defend more than our individual lives and our national life. We seek to defend our way of life. We seek to defend a system of society in which men are safe from persecution, are free to express their thoughts, are protected in that freedom by courts—the whole thing that we call free government.

FREE GOVERNMENT has its principal home in America and Great Britain. If it is destroyed in England by a foreign foe, then it will be more difficult for America to defend it here.

We are arming for defense. Defense against whom, and what? Defense against authoritarian government. Authoritarian government, just now, is most conspicuously represented by Germany. It is Germany, just now, that seeks most aggressively to extend authoritarian government by military force. The other form of authoritarian government, Russian communism, is not now attempting military aggression, though she is always aggressive through propaganda and infiltration.

So, because Germany seeks to impose authoritarian government on the world, by military aggression among other means, we are arming for defense against Germany.

If Germany attacks us by arms, will she come directly? She will not. Under present conditions she cannot.

BY WHAT PATH, then, will Germany come? Some think by way of South America. Part of our present program of defense goes upon that theory.

But it is not by way of South America that Germany will attack us by arms in the near future. She cannot get to South America so long as the British navy exists. Instinctively we know that. We know that the British navy is a protection of us against Germany.

How, then, will Germany come? She must come by way of Britain. She must first conquer England. Germany's military program, for aggression westward, is clear. She will strive to overcome England. Her initial attack will be made by planes. Germany's plan is already formulated: send 100 planes per hour over London and keep it up for 100 hours—10,000 planes in all. She has an immense superiority in planes—though England is now striving to make up the deficiency she suffers.

If Germany subdues England, she will take possession of the British fleet. At that point, with the British fleet taken over by Germany—at that point arises our real danger, and the only danger, of attack upon us by Germany with military force.

In this situation, what should be out present policy and strategy? It is to recognize that England is our shield. She is our shield in the sheer geographic sense that she stands between us and Germany.

SPECIFICALLY, at the moment, our shield is the British air force. If today England had 10,000 airplanes, there would be no danger of Germany attacking England. England would be safe, and we would be safe.

The lesson is clear. The best form of preparedness that America can practice, at this time, is to supply planes to England. This ought not to be done by Government action, for that would amount to military alliance and be a kind of aggression on our part. The planes should go to England through ordinary trade channels. If anything in our neutrality law interferes with this, we should change it. Our neutrality policy is not adopted primarily for the benefit of the world; we adopt it for our own benefit and our own safety.

A steady and large supply of airplanes made in our factories and shipped to England, with confidence on the part of England that she can continue to get them, whether before war or during war—that, without cost to us, is, under present conditions, the best preparedness we can practice. It is equivalent to hundreds of millions spent by us directly for defense. We should have the direct defense too. But airplanes for England would be our most effective, immediate step.

After every war, and after most human mistakes, people reflect, "If only we had done so and so—we might have averted it." To send abundant planes to England now may avert our doing later what we did in the Great War—wait until actual war between England and Germany is on, become emotional over it, get involved in it, and then enter it at uncountable cost.

The Lies Have It

By Barnet Nover

Europe's New Crisis

NINE MONTHS AGO, in a treaty with Great Britain, Italy solemnly renewed the pledge made in January, 1937, that she would refrain from violating Spain's territorial integrity or upset the status quo in the Mediterranean. She also promised to withdraw her troops from Spain after the civil war had ended, if not before.

At the Munich conference, Hitler and Chamberlain signed a joint pronunciamento pledging Germany and Great Britain to live at peace with one another.

A little more than five weeks later, France and the Third Reich ostentatiously buried the hatchet by signing a pact of friendship and non-aggression.

IF THIS NETWORK of treaties has any meaning, Great Britain and France should have nothing to fear either from Germany or Italy or both. They have the solemn assurance of Hitler that he has no intention of making war against either of them. And since they, in turn, show no disposition to interpose any obstacles on his march to the east—indeed, the establishment of a German economic hegemony in central and southeastern Europe has Mr. Chamberlain's public approval—a war rising out of purely European developments would seem to be out of the question.

As for Italy, the Anglo-Italian pact of last April should serve as a guarantee against the use of Spain as an Italian lever with which to pry colonial areas out of either Great Britain or France.

Actually, neither Great Britain nor France appears to put much stock in these treaties. Foreign Minister Bonnet's strong demand that Italy withdraw her troops from Spain, now that Franco's final victory seems assured, and Sir Samuel Hoare's chest-thumping speech regarding Britain's invincibility in war, reveals the extent of Anglo-French perturbations over the situation following the fall of Barcelona.

THE FACT has now become apparent both in France and Great Britain that the European situation is moving in the direction of another Munich with, perhaps, Tunisia assigned the sacrificial role played last September by Czecho-Slovakia. It is feared that in this developing crisis, the Anglo-Italian, Anglo-German and Franco-German treaties may have no greater value than did Hitler's March pledge to refrain from attacking Czecho-Slovakia or France's treaty of alliance with that unhappy republic.

The past record of the Fascist dictators makes it apparent that neither will hesitate to violate a solemn pledges if it is to his interest to do so. Unfortunately, the record of Europe's major democracies is also far from spotless in this regard. Bad faith is pandemic in the diplomacy of today.

That, however, is not the most serious aspect of the crisis which today faces Europe. The real danger arises out of two other, if related, circumstances. The first is that the belief harbored by certain statesmen in London and Paris, that they had somehow managed to separate the partners of the Berlin-Rome axis, is proving to be a pathetic illusion. The other is that, in view of the long British and French record of capitulation under Fascist pressure, there is no reason why the Nazi and Fascist governments should take seriously the warnings by spokesmen for Great Britain and France that the two countries are prepared to fight to defend each other's interests.

RECENT REPORTS from Paris suggest that Foreign Minister Bonnet believes that because of the Franco-German pact, the Third Reich can be expected to preserve a hands off policy should Franco-Italian relations reach the breaking point.

The assumption in Paris has been that France alone is more than a match for Italy, hence has no reason to give way to Italian pressure for the cession of Tunisia, Corsica or some other choice morsel of French territory. That assumption may have been true before the fall of Barcelona. It is less true now, in Spain as a potential base for an attack on France. And if Italy is supported by Germany, the French position would become parlous. That is why in their speeches to the Chamber, Messrs Daladier and Bonnet made so much point of Britain's solidarity with France.

IT IS POSSIBLE that should it come to a final showdown as between Italy and France, and should France keep her nerve, it would be Italy, not France, that would finally give way. Italy's capacity to wage a major war is problematical, while the certainty of Germany coming to her partner's assistance is as open to question as was the certainty of Italy's coming to the support of Germany had the Czecho-Slovak crisis led to war.

It is probable, however, that both Mussolini and Hitler assume that if the screws are put on France with sufficient vigor the Paris government will give way, as it did, and as Great Britain did, last fall.

This belief may be entirely out of order—this time. There is a point beyond which even the most peace-minded nation will not retreat. But the record of the democratic powers in their relations with the totalitarian states is such that Mussolini and Hitler can be expected to go far farther in putting pressure on France than ordinary prudence would dictate.

Having assumed for so long that the democratic powers are pusillanimous, and having had this assumption verified on repeated occasions, it would be strange if Berlin and Rome would now succumb to a sudden attack of timidity.

Victory has emboldened them to press on. And the fact that, with each successive victory, the balance of power which was once so overwhelmingly in favor of the democratic group has now swung sharply in their direction, will certainly not persuade them to moderation.

That is why Europe now faces another crisis as serious as that which preceded the meeting at Munich.

FHA Note Issue Oversubscribed 28 Times

The Treasury announced last night a record oversubscription for $100,000,000 of five year, 1⅜ per cent notes of the United States Housing Authority.

Subscriptions were for $2,775,000,000, or nearly 28 times the amount for sale. Subscribers will be allotted only 4 per cent of the amount asked.

The notes, guaranteed by the Treasury, were the first offered by the Housing Authority.

Officials attributed the oversubscription to the excess reserves in banks, now at the unprecedented figure of $3,600,000,000.

Light Comedy Holds Screen At the Capitol

Jack Haley Star of 'Thanks for Everything;' Roscoe Ates on Stage

"THANKS FOR EVERYTHING." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by Gilbert Wright, adapted to the screen by Curtis Kenyon and Art Arthur, with Jack Haley, Adolph Menjou, Jack Oakie, Arleen Whelan, Tony Martin, Binnie Barnes, George Barbier, Warren Hymer, Gregory Gaye, Andrew Tombes and Frank Sully. Songs by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel. Directed by William A. Seiter. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

"Thanks for Jack Haley" might have been a more accurate title than the one which some optimistic soul thought up for "Thanks for Everything," the new film at the Capitol. That ingratiating comic has his best role to date and if you enjoy the perplexed Mr. Haley, the comedy will give you an unworried hour or so.

As Mr. Average American, Mr. Haley makes you so mad at his oppressors that it's downright annoying. Although Jack doesn't know how wretchedly he is being used until the last reel, he finally does turn on them in just the unjaundiced fashion that a Jack Haley would turn on anybody.

Certainly Adolph Menjou deserves all the retribution any one could give him. As the head of an enterprising advertising bureau he has instituted a $25,000 prize campaign to find the typical American, which unique person is supposed to answer 100 questions on personal tastes which various polls have shown to be prevailing. Our Jack, a Missouri grocery boy in George Barbier's store, is the winner and goes off to the big, bad city to collect his fortune. Meanwhile, suave Menjou has realized that here is more of a gold-mine than he had expected and is determined to keep Jack under his eye as a guinea pig to public opinion. How he tricks Jack out of his money is enough to destroy anyone's faith in human nature. So our boy is torn from his girl, Arleen Whelan, and Menjou's assistants watch over Jack. He is fortunate to have such amusing body-gazers as Jack Oakie and Binnie Barnes, although even they do him dirt.

From Grocery to Heights

In the inscrutable ways of the celluloid Arleen is whisked from the Missouri grocery store to the lofty—and revolving—pinnacle of Miss World's Fair, all of which gives Tony Martin an opportunity to warble. Arleen is suddenly wealthy and Jack must be kept from more than $985 per year, for then he'd cease to be the average man and his tastes would run away with him. Next time you ask for a raise, comfort yourself with that, my fine buckos!

The deus ex machina of the plot is a mysterious ambassador whose government seeks to know what the average man thinks about war. Menjou is abashed to find his charge is meekly pacifistic until, by an Orson Wellesh ruse, he convinces his isolated victim that New York is being attacked. Steam-rollered into action, the enraged Haley pushes people off the streets, telling them to be careful of another attack, and fervidly seeks to enlist. Yes, it is funny, although some moments it is a little too true to be good.

Jack Oakie and Binnie Barnes are amusing as a pair of office lovers who, tiring of the shackles of the Menjou advertising agency, yearn for the shackles of marriage. Menjou is as sleek as ever, even managing to redeem himself at the finale. George Barbier blusters, Arleen Whelan looks and Tony Martin sings—sings, by the by, "Thanks for Everything," and pleasantly, too.

But, in a turkish bath or the booby hatch, it's Jack Haley, as the boy from Missouri, who has to be shown, to whom we say "Thanks for Everything."

How to Be a Vaudeville Hit

In case you, too, might want to work on the stage of a vaudeville house some day, take a small barrel, lay it down so it will roll and put a board about 3 feet long on it. Next place a large rubber ball on your head and then get a cute little blonde to stand on her head on top of the ball which meanwhile you, with all the patience of a prophet, are continuing to balance on the top of your head. Get that? Now, step calmly on the see-sawing plank and smile at the folks.

The Juvelys go through these inadequately described maneuvers to make the most engrossing of the Capitol's stage acts.

A smart piece of ginger is the most refreshing performer. On with Headliner Roscoe Ates is this personable redhead and, whether she sings or speaks—in an unusually well-modulated tone—this little lady has what an audience likes. Her name: Barbara Ray. Mr. Ates, of stuttering fame, has a line that is both tried and true. But the aforementioned Ray supreme brightens his turn.

Art Brown and Frank Young, whom you may have heard over station WOL, are at the Hammond organ and piano, respectively. Their medley is pleasing and they wind up as accompaniment for Conklin and Thomas, intercollegiate shag champions who jitter their way into the finale.

As successors to the Capitol Comets are the 16 Rhythmic Rockets. They are not so numerous as the late Comets, but they are lively and their Indian dance is colorful, although handicapped by settings which, for the Capitol, seem a trifle seedy. Held over from last week are the Eight Men of Manhattan, whose songs are fine when they are not drowned out by too loud accompaniment from the orchestra pit.

Shakespeare Plays Greatest Training

Playing Shakespearean roles on the stage is the greatest training in the world for those youngsters who aspire to success in motion pictures, Alan Marshal believes so, and he gives full credit to any ability he may have gained to his apprenticeship in the Shakespearean school.

"The overplaying in such roles gives an excellent training in the value of gesture and voice," says Marshal, who appears opposite Luise Rainer in "Dramatic School." "It is easy, then, in a modern play, to tone down this broad system of histrionics."

Warner Brothers picturization of a novel by Bertram Millhauser and Beulah Marie Dix, adapted to the screen by Sig Herzig, with John Garfield, Claude Rains, Ann Sheridan, May Robson, "Dead End" kids. Directed by Busby Berkeley. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

John Garfield, who made so instantaneous a hit in a secondary role in "Four Daughters," assumes stellar proportions by the merit of his performance in "They Made Me a Criminal," which opened yesterday on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater.

BELL

Mr. Garfield, in this subject, plays a tough young pugilist, who is made the butt of unfortunate events that throw him out into the world an ostensible fugitive from justice. He is supposed to have committed a murder, of which he was totally innocent, and, being a "southpaw" in the ring, is conseled not to fight again, lest his peculiar style of fisticuffing betray his identity and make him a logical contender for the electric chair. Taking the word of his machinating advisers in the matter, he tramps almost the whole width of the continent before finding asylum on a fruit ranch conducted by an elderly and kindly lady, who is endeavoring to rehabilitate a gang of young East Side hoodlums from New York. They add nothing whatever to the sum total of the fighter's eventual chances of freedom from both the penalties of the law and its enduring threat. They do, however, add much to the enlivenment of the film, since these lads are impersonated by that precious band of young thugs known as the "Dead End" kids.

Action is initiated in New York and the picture's most exciting developments are laid there in a burst of introductory action that is high melodramatic and not too believable. Once the story's false premise is accepted, things go on smoothly enough from there. There are times, 'way out there in Arizona, when the hair-trigger quality of the opening scenes is permitted to sag a little below its initial impetus, but there are few moments in the unreeling of the celluloid when interest is allowed to recede seriously from its initial high point.

Justice Finally Done

The manner in which justice is finally done, at the hands of a New York plain-clothes man, who has trailed his prey for months in order a make a record for himself with a commanding officer who has no great regard for his ability as a sleuth, comes a little too abruptly to be completely convincing, but still stands as a substantial sop to those who are insistent upon an ending that must be both happy and productive of the promise of a rosy future, regardless of any serious concern over logic or the convincing revelation of character.

John Garfield's role is rather conspicuously molded to fit the groove with which James Cagney's name is most definitely associated in the picture-going mind. He talks in the patois of the fight racket and the lower strata of New York's underprivileged. He has some fight scenes that are nicely executed and, contrary to all usual custom in such matters, is knocked cold in the crucial battle of his career. But he earns the money to start the filling station of his benefactors, nevertheless, and that is the main idea. It is after all that that the New York cop has a sudden rush of compassion to the head and Johnnie's romance with the girl who originally hated him is made sure.

The screen play is not too closely knit, but it sufficed to demonstrate that Mr. Garfield is an actor of parts, just as was so brilliantly forecast in "Four Daughters," and enables several others in the cast to acquit themselves with credit almost equal to the star's. Gloria Dickson is the girl in the case and does well with her part, and Mary Robson, as the aging benefactress of the oppressed, contributes one of her characteristically engaging performances, bristling with the acrimonious outbursts of which a lady from whom more placid manifestations of a pugnacious nature might be expected. Claude Rains, as the fighter's Nemesis; Ann Sheridan, Robert Gleckler, and those "Dead End" kids are others who do much to salvage the play on the side of enlivening entertainment.

Lionel Stander Stars

"They Made Me a Criminal" has been speedily paced by Director Busby Berkeley and the photography is more than ordinarily effective in sepia tints.

The stage bill at the Earle this week is headlined by that raucous-voiced Hollywood star, Lionel Stander, who is about the same on the stage as he is on the screen, with the comedy twist perhaps a little emphasized in his personal appearance. He does no ordinary "Hollywood blurb," devoted to bromidic commonplaces, but presents an interval of monologic humor that seemed to please yesterday afternoon's audience a great deal.

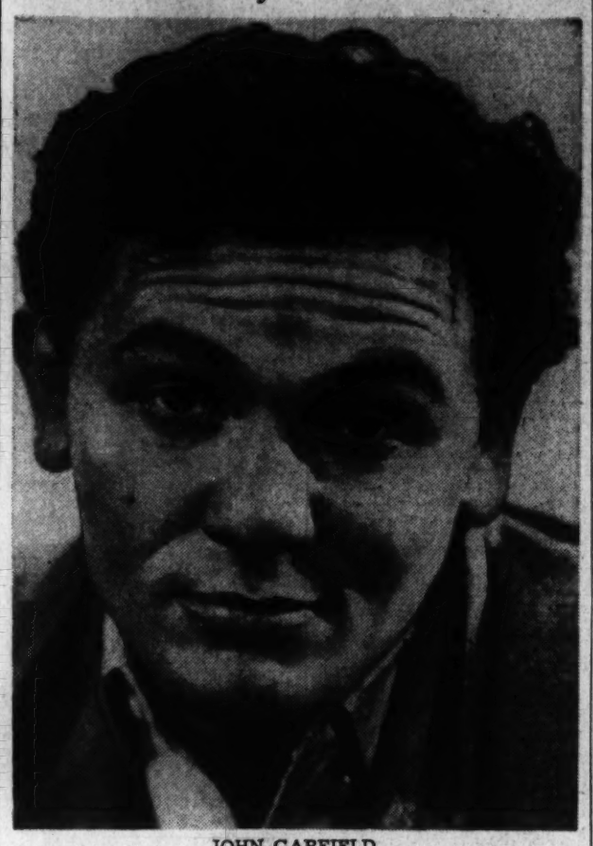
Mr. Stander is supported by a considerable group of capable specialists. Foremost among them are the Randall Sisters, who came dangerously near "running away with the show;" Emmett Oldfield and company, consisting principally of Eddie Ware, in a recrudescence of what Mr. Oldfield used to do when he was the unnamed "stooge" of Walter Dare Wahl; Phillips and Kohl, champion "shag" dancers, and the Earle Roxyettes, who seem not quite so thrilling this week as they have on numerous occasions.

The Paramount News and a "Popeye the Sailor" cartoon comedy round out a program that strikes a fair average of merit, but nothing greatly above.

Wants to Shop Alone

Glenda Farrell is so afraid of crowds that she arranged with a Los Angeles department store to permit her to do her Christmas shopping after regular store hours.

The Man They Made a Criminal



JOHN GARFIELD,
who made his first film appearance in "Four Daughters" and now is to be seen in the stellar role of "They Made Me a Criminal," this week's major screen attraction at the Earle Theater. He is surrounded by a superior cast, led by Gloria Dickson, Claude Rains, May Robson, the "Dead End" kids and numerous others

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 27.—The gusts from the George Raft-Paramount blow-up have blown good parts into the path of Lloyd Nolan.

The first wind blew Lloyd and his showboat in 'St. Louis Blues" right up on a stranger's front lawn, and when Jessie Ralph played "Way Down South in the Land of Dixie" on her calliope it was one of the funniest scenes in the picture. Nolan takes over Raft's part in "The Magnificent Fraud" and also Georgie's dressing room, which used to belong to Gary Cooper.

HEDDA HOPPER

There'll be lots of chit-chat back and forth about Raft! An actor doesn't always know when a part is best for him, but I will say for George he's had a pretty steady gauge on his own ability and values it at its true worth. You can't stay up in lights unless a good part keeps you there.

William Allen White showed Actor Grant Mitchell the sights of Emporia, Kans., during the holiday season. Now Grant is trying to give Editor White more than a bird's-eye view of California, since he's come out to spend the winter at La Jolla. I wish Hollywood could persuade him to become a resident—we could certainly use a man of his ability, judgment and good taste.

When George Murphy complained about getting a flash in a picture the producer said: "Well, you're crazy; we're building you up the same way we did Fred Astaire. The reason he was such a hit was because in his first picture the audience only got a flash at him, which made them beg for more." And look where he is!

When Cary Grant was handed a little white box containing wedding cake to be placed under his pillow, he had the decency to blush when he asked for another one. I've had such hard luck with mine—I've brought hundreds of those little boxes home. Maybe it's because I don't use a pillow!

Did you know that "Rippling Rhythm" Shep Fields studied law; Eddie Cantor was a tailor; Joe Penner, an auto mechanic; Abe Lyman and Paul Whiteman, cab drivers; Benny Fields, artist; Jack Oakie, call boy; Parkyakarkus, advertising man; Kate Smith, nurse; Eddie Duchin, pharmacist; Phil Regan, policeman; Morton Downey, railroad candy butcher; Milton Berle, song (no hits) writer; Ethel Merman, steno for Kaley Bragg; Jerry Cooper, railway clerk; Sam Goldwyn (Goldfish), glove salesman; Jesse Lasky, cornetist in white tights; Raymond Paige, teacher, and Frank Black, dairyman? And I milked cows, too!

Rhea Gable must have used psychology at the race track the other day. I saw her play Battle Call, Cynic Queen and Merrymood across the board. And I'll be darned if they didn't pay $9.20 to win, $5.80 to place and $4.60 to show in the order named. If she's that good, think of the fun she'll have with that alimony. And if I ever run across a nag named Deadline or Columnist, I'll give it my bankroll.

The Metro commissary looked like St. Patrick's Day. There were 200 all-green costumes there at the same time from "The Wizard of Oz." And some of the bodies inside them wore make-up of the same color.

And Margaret Lindsay is our latest glamour girl to change her spots. I mean color—she's now Titian.

Elaine Barrie is going to play Jack Barrymore's oldest daughter in that New York play. Now they're trying to pursuade his own child, Diana, to play the youngest.

Now that Bert Lahr's been such a sensational success in "Zaza" and "The Wizard of Oz," I understand he's being considered for the lead in the remake of "He Who Gets Slapped."

Pedro De Cordoba, who studied for the priesthood, is the father of his sixth child. He said, "I hope one of my sons will carry on." But he neglected to say as actor, father—or in the church!

They're preparing to shoot "Beau Geste" in Buttercup Valley.

Hal Roach is planning another Topper picture; the first two have been such a success.

The beautiful building which houses the Music Corporation of America has signs all about it saying, "M. C. A. Square." But there before your very eyes you see nothing but a big triangle.

On dear little Arleen Whelan's only trip to New York she was so busy making appearances she got inside only one shop.

Columbia

Presented for its well-deserved repeat week is "The Cowboy and the Lady," at the Columbia, with Gary Cooper again in cowboy togs, emitting modulated yippees to leading lady Merle Oberon.

Merle is a rich girl who poses as a lady's maid to lasso Gary, who is passing his time as a roder hand till he meets a girl fitted to share the cabin he is building on his ranch in Montana.

Gary considers rich people merely show horses, prefers work horses, since they know how to carry their share of the load. How Merle reconciles his views with her bulging purse, her father is cured of overwhelming political ambition; how her uncle's whimsical philosophy comes home roost makes a fine and entertaining serio-comic screen play.

Not so well directed as he has been in previous films, seeming a bit tired and definitely thinner, Cooper, nevertheless, manages to make this idyll of a shy cowboy something which you will remember with kindness.

Ilka Chase narrates a fashion forecast which is tossed off with such expert lightness that all other describers of her ilk might might well take note.

Shots of underseas wrestling and some well chosen words from one of the lifeboat crew who officiated at the rescuing of the passengers of the Cavalier are the most memorable clips of the newsreel.

A Pete Smith specialty shows how dogs have aided science in the struggle to overcome plagues, and reiterates the old saw about a dog's being "man's best friend."

Blondell and O'Brien Costar, With Young Jordan Stealing Show

"OFF THE RECORD." Warner Brothers picturization of an original story by Saul Elkins and Sally Sandlin, adapted to the screen by Earl Baldwin, Niven Busch, Lawrence Kimble and Robert Buckner, co-starring Pat O'Brien and Joan Blondell with Bobby Jordan. Alan Baxter, Joe Cunningham, Douglas Dumbrille, Armand Kalis and Ed. Doering. Directed by James Flood. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At the Metropolitan Theater

Imagine Joan Blondell and Pat O'Brien as the adopted parents of Bobby Jordan, toughest of the tough "Dead End" kids. This is the comedy-pregnant situation around which "Off the Record" revolves.

Joan and Pat are young newspaper people. Joan writes a column which Pat tactlessly assures her has probably one reader out of the paper's total circulation. After this faux pass, he proposes to her, is surprised at meeting a vehement turndown. Joan, put on her mettle, waltzes out and gets herself a big scoop. But neither Pat nor the city editor will even listen to her description of the story. They shoo her away and tell her to put whatever it is into her column. So she does. With the result that the paper is deluged with inquiries, but no one on the staff has the faintest notion of what it is all about.

The big story is disinterred from Joan's column and made the basis of a campaign against gambling. The original yarn, it should be said, dealt with the employment of children by gamblers, was hung on the thin strand that Bobby Jordan acts as lookout for a pinball game and socks the kids who try to run in slugs in place of nickels. Upshot of the big newspaper antigambling game is that the "big shot" slips out of the net, Bobby goes to reform school and his older brother, Joe (played grandly by Allen Baxter), takes the rap for the big boy, but is double-crossed by being given a five-year term when he had been promised six months.

Marriage Rears Its Head

Conscience-stricken by the debacle of her campaign against crime, Joan promises to marry Pat on the condition that they take Bobby out of reform school. This is where the fun really begins. For Bobby, to put it mildly, is not house-broken. But he's as game as they come. Pat puts him to work as a copy boy. Then he graduates into a youthful cameraman, proves a "natural" where rough tactics are indicated—always comes back with the pictures, even though he's been racked with seasickness or had to step on policemen's toes.

Then brother Joe makes a break from the "big house" and Bobby has to dig up money to help him. A diamond from a photographed collection is reported missing and things look pretty bad for Bobby. Here is where the story goes into "high" before gathering power for a final smashing impact.

In entertainment content," Off the Record" is definitely chockful. It is smartly paced and its representation of the newspaper mise en scene is rather well done, pratically void of anachronisms.

Bobby Jordan Is Tops

While Joan Blondell and Pat O'Brien present attractive and well done characterizations, the picture's honors must go to Bobby Jordan who proves himself a fine young actor, capable of giving inflection and finesse to a role that could easily be made merely crude and indefinite. Bobby has the same crisp modern touch that gives such great distinction to the work of the screen's newest sensation, John Garfield. He's a swaggering and tough little slicker, pitifully wise for his years, integrally sad and disillusioned, at the core just an uprooted boy who needs and wants some sort of stay on which to hang his potential love and loyalty. Any actor who can make you feel all these things, is a real actor even if he's only a youngster in his teens.

Clyde Lucas and his orchestra again prove that they are one of the few orchestral units capable of putting on a really entertaining musical short. They switch their backgrounds from a night spot to Mexico, to the old West and to the circus.

Our old friend, Charlie Chase, pops up with a something called "Pie a la Maid" that is one of the best he's done in too long. It will collapse you in chuckles even if you're in that "Just try to make me laugh" frame of mind. Floyd Gibbons pops another of his excellent adventure yarns and the newsreel is a little bit of all right, too.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, January 27.

LORETTA YOUNG: This is the story the Department of Justice is trying to pin on Bill Buckner: that originally he was sent to Hollywood to interest you in putting up $50,000 in the investment plan he and his colleagues had conceived . . . that a genuine romance ensued . . . and so Buckner sought the money elsewhere, from a number of other Hollywood citizens . . . The United States attorney's office also will try to prove that, just before the story became front-page news, you made Buckner your agent and promised to assign 10 per cent of your earnings as commissions for his agency work.

RICHARD WHITNEY: Paul Shields, the broker who was among the first to lead the fight against the reactionaries of the stock exchange, is ailing at the Medical Center. He's Mrs. Gary Cooper's stepfather . . . Al Capone: Don't believe those reports that you and Charlie (Lucky) Luciano will be summoned to testify against Johnny Torrio. It's just publicity . . . Herbert Hoover: One of the scenes in "The American Way," the new Kaufman & Hart show, refers to the rosy campaign promises you made when you were a candidate against Al Smith. Your campaign posters are exhibited . . . Smith, who saw the show on opening night, has written an enthusiastic indorsement.

LOUIS B. MAYER: Your studio just announced that Fanny Brice no longer is on your pay roll. There's an amusing tale concerning this: Fanny was assigned to appear in a picture about Hawaii. At the last minute she was told that her role had been altered somewhat—that she'd have to drop her accent and utter sophisticated lines . . . "Hey, I'm Fanny Brice," she reminded the producer, "not Ina Claire" . . . So the role was assigned to Ina Claire.

GROVER WHALEN: Donald Deskey, the Radio City designer, who has been appointed to head the Federal Arts Project Building at the World's Fair here, isn't sure now whether he'll accept the job. Deskey, who has been trying to rent some office space in Manhattan, has been turned down by every landlord, because of the fear of agitation . . . Nicholas Murray Butler: Owen Davis, twice winner of the Pulitzer Prize for plays, is very ill . . . Neville Chamberlain: At the February 19 auction, tendered by the League of American Writers, one of the manuscripts—just received—will be a letter from Sigmund Freud. It's date-marked "Berchtesgaden."

THOMAS E. DEWEY: The man who confessed to you that he had done the shooting in the Goldis-Snyder case—the case on which you campaigned for district attorney—has been complaining of a toothache while in jail here . . . A few days ago the tooth was so painful that the prisoner was taken to Rinkers Island, where the municipal dentist decided to extract it . . . He placed the patient in the chair and reached for his forceps . . . At the sight of the instrument, this patient—who has confessed to a brutal, premeditated murder—immediately fainted.

HOWARD HUGHES: The Long Island police insist that you're furnishing the bail for those two cafe society youngsters who were arrested last week regarding the theft of a ring. Both men will be questioned again soon, in connection with a more important case . . . Irving Berlin: There'll be a mass exodus of song writers from Hollywood to New York. Rainger & Robin and Warren & Dubin are expected to lead the shift . . . Eddy Duchin: Your recording of "My Heart Belongs to Daddy," with Mary Martin vocalizing, is supplanting your "Old Man Mose" record . . . Bar Association: Harold Kunstler, who was forced to quit his job as Municipal Court judge, now is trying his own suit vs. the Equitable Life Insurance Co., in Part VIII of the court where he used to preside.

JACK BENNY: Is it true that you plan to plead nolo contendere? . . . Jules Brulatour: The last time you and Hope Hampton were seen in public was at the premiere of "The American Way." You both came up the aisle after the show and held a long discussion—in French, so that listeners wouldn't understand . . . Councilman Baldwin: Did the police raid gambling joints at Broadway and 51st and Broadway and 61st on Saturday night? . . . Webb Miller: Pierre Van Paassen, who was with you in Ethiopia and then went to Palestine, is exposing Hitler's influence upon the Arabs, in a book called "Days of Our Years."

New Diets Eliminate Weakness

Principal Virtue of These Foods Is Filling Up Empty Spaces; Are Low in Calories

By Ida Jean Kain.

THE TWO things that stand in the way of a svelte silhouette are appetite and that "all-gone" feeling which follows a reduction in food, both making you feel as thin as a drink of water before you've lost a pound. But that's being changed . . . reduction today is almost easy!

The feeling of weakness can be averted by the use of mineral and vitamin concentrates—the greatest boons to reducers since calories were discovered. And hardly a day goes by without bringing forth some new reducer's food to help combat your appetite. There is no food that will reduce your weight, but a variety of foods will keep you happy though dieting.

The principal virtue of these foods is that they fill the empty spaces for a minimum of calories. There are crisp, crunchy biscuits. Butter substitutes look and taste like butter and are practically innocent of calories. And there are even reducer's breads which are high in protein and low in starch. What we're waiting for is a food that guarantees most of the poundage off the hipline!

Innumerable fruits and vegetables also furnish bulk and very few calories. Put your ingenuity to work and include in the menus such bulky garden products as string beans, cabbage, celery, lettuce, apples, bananas, peaches, melons, etc. Those fruits and vegetables tend to give you an immediate sense of fullness so that you are satisfied with less food.

If your menus consisted wholly of these fibrous, low-calorie foods, however, you would soon be hungry again. Your diet must contain some of the foods that are most lasting in satiety—lean meat, fish or fowl, eggs, cheese, potato, and a small amount of butter.

When a careful check is kept on the calories, the diet can be stretched to include reducer's luxuries like cream for the coffee, sugar on grapefruit and even an occasional dessert.

You are unlikely to stop a diet that makes you feel superbly healthy. To grow healthier as you slim down, supplement your reducing diet with one concentrated A, B, D, G vitamin capsule daily. Also, unless you take daily one glass of skim milk or buttermilk plus a serving of cottage cheese or cheese for calcium and phosphorus, and have plenty of the iron-rich foods—egg yolks, lean meat, whole grains, green vegetables—you should obtain these in the form of mineral concentrates.

Profile Hat in Toyo

As vital to the resort wardrobe as a coat of tan is the simple elegance of a fine toyo hat. Soft as a kerchief, light as a Florida breeze is the hand-blocked toyo, above. It is indispensable for pastel woolens, tailored prints or cool shirtwaist frocks. It is classic in detail, yet flourishes forth under a swash-buckling profile brim. The crystal white straw is complemented with either dark or brilliantly colored grosgrain bands

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Stag Hunt

"How many men have you got lined up now?"

"Let's see . . . well, only four, counting Col. Crick. And you can't be absolutely sure of him, unless his lumbago gets better."

"Let's go down my list . . . say, here's that young Mr. Goggle. Everybody says he's perfectly brilliant."

"I know, but we've already got one New Dealer and if we have that sugar lobbyist——"

"Can't we keep 'em on foreign affairs . . . or art . . . or something?"

"We-l-l, I suppose so. Say! Are you certain this man Goggle hasn't a wife? I thought I heard something about a wife coming on from Nebraska or somewhere?"

"Well, maybe I'd better check again. Say, Horace Tapp's wife's out of town."

"Yes, but he always talks about her all the time. And then he looks so married. Now I've got a Mr. Chinchscope here from the Department of Agriculture. Do you know anything about him?"

"Heavens, don't have him. He'll talk about soil erosion all evening."

"Well, but after all he's a man . . . and a Phi Beta Kappa. And we really ought to have one scientist."

"Why don't we have that Dr. ——; oh, you know who I mean—from the Digges Institute?"

"I know. What IS his name? I've got him here on my list somewhere—oh, yes, Duller! Dr. Duller. Say, he's deadly."

"Well, maybe if he had a good stiff cocktail——"

"He's always worse then. He talks about his research."

"I know, but we've got to have somebody . . . with all these widows. Well, who else have you got on your list?"

"Oh, I've got a perfectly grand man here somewhere. He's rich and a widower and he has a perfectly wonderful old house with a marble staircase. Oh, here he is. Col. Lionel Floweree."

"A Southern gentleman, I suppose?"

"We-l-l, he's Southern."

"I'll put him down. Say, I've got an idea! Why don't we ask Archie Dreem? He's a wonderful conversationalist and he can play the piano, and do magic——"

"I know, but—well, Archie's been so hard up lately. I really doubt if he's got a decent dress suit."

"I wonder if he'd let me rent him one . . . well, let's put him on reserve . . . Now, then, who else have we got?"

"Well, of course, we can always fall back on Chuck Wilder."

"I know, but he always gets tanked so early and is such a nuisance. You know I'd like someone from the embassies. Haven't you got any Latin lovers?"

"Here's Jules Casaba . . . but, of course, he's always dated up so far in advance."

"We might try him though . . . only we'll have to keep him away from Mrs. Flagg. Say, what about Dr. Poach? He goes everywhere."

"I know, but he simply won't utter a word until he's eaten."

"Well, we could put him with Mrs. Pigeon. She can't hear out of her left ear anyway. I tell you we can't be too particular. We've got to get some men."

"All right. Let me look at my list again. I wish we could find a good man-about-town type."

"What about Herringbone Bash . . . if we could get him."

"We-l-l, I don't know. There's all that talk about him and that Malay dancer."

"Well, he wouldn't have to bring her, would he? I tell you we've got to get some men. Who have you got left now?"

"Here's old Mr. Ivy."

"We simply can't have him. He always goes to sleep."

"Well, what about Johnny Gink?"

"He doesn't look a day over 19. Imagine him taking out Mrs. Normandie."

"Honestly, it just doesn't seem as if there were any men around 42 in the world. Well, who are we going to get for Mrs. Normandie?"

"What about Sam Waddle?"

"He's pretty fat."

"Well, so is she."

"Then there's all that talk about that bank trouble he was mixed up in."

"We can't bother about a little thing like that. Put him down. Say, what about Charlie Puffer?"

"Charlie won't be back from Battle Creek for two weeks."

"Well, what about Jimmy Stepp? Has Mabel gone to Reno yet?"

"She's leaving next week."

"Oh, say, I thought of something else! Marcia Mink's going to the Caribbean next week and Arthur will be free. Now why don't we just put this off a couple of weeks——"

"Oh, then, Charlie Puffer would be back from Battle Creek——"

"And Mabel Stepp would be gone to Reno——"

"And Marcia to Europe——"

"That'd make three extra men!"

"Yes, and Col. Crick might be over his lumbago."

"And I might be able to get a dress suit for Archie Dreem——"

Mary Haworth's Mail

Scion of Old Family Feels Caste Distinction Too Keenly to Marry 'Middle Class' Girl He Loves

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I turn to you as a victim of what seems to be a modern application of the caste system. For months I've fought a losing battle against birth and background and have decided finally to hoist the white flag. The experience has left me puzzled and hurt, however, and I hope for enlightenment from you, if not encouragement.

I came to Washington from a State where no sharp class distinctions exist, and where my heriditary membership in the great Middle Class has never been a drawback to me. It never occurred to me that I was not as good as anyone else until I fell in love with an "upper class" man who has given me a rude awakening. Although he loves me "to distraction," (so he says), he has just told me, in the kindliest way possible, that we never can be married because of the wide difference in our family background, social connections and intellectual training.

He is 28 and I am four years younger. He comes from a long line of cultured ancestors who were among the first settlers in America. He was carefully (too carefully, I think) educated in exclusive schools and is now making a remarkable salary for a man his age. He is popular and much in demand at social affairs where he meets the men and women whose names dot the pages of our daily papers. I rarely accompany him to these functions, as the unattached male is more desirable in a city so crowded with females. When he can evade these engagements, we spend quiet evenings together which, until recently, were ideally happy ones.

My own family background has never caused me a moment's shame and never will, in spite of his attitude. My parents have neither wealth nor brilliance; nothing but courage, generosity and good humor. I sent myself to university for three years, through hard work, and frankly, I wouldn't trade one atom of the wisdom and good sense I've gained from that struggle for all this man's superficial intelligence and social successes.

Perhaps you think I am not showing good sense in this dilemma and that I would be well rid of a narrow-minded, hide-bound young snob. But I wouldn't love him if I didn't recognize in him some latent qualities of sincerity, tenderness, and a sense of humor—somewhat muffled. His feeling on the subject of our innate inequality arouses more sympathy in me than resentment, as I realize he has been born and reared with these views—and that he suffers as much from his conflicting emotions as I do from hurt pride.

I had hoped that love and patience ultimately would win him over, but his ideas are too deeply ingrained, and I have told him that I don't want to see him again. He says he can't live without me. But he must, I am afraid, as I don't want his friendship or his love, if he believes I am not qualified to be his wife. What do you think about it?

CASTE-OFF.

Discredit to Ancestors

DEAR CASTE-OFF: This young man's silly pride of position—personal and ancestral—casts a disgraceful and misleading reflection upon the class which he purports to symbolize. It is no credit to the cultural processes which begot and shaped him, that he should have turned out to be such a prig. The advantages he claims should, and in most cases do, produce a better type of citizen.

I have put your question to four persons who, as one woman aptly phrased it, "yield to nobody in point of ancestry." Three were unanimous in savagely denouncing your suitor's attitude. The fourth felt, mildly, that "we are what we are; the product of our inheritance, training and environment, and at 28, it is too late to expect, or to attempt, a change in a man's fundamental social attitudes."

Here is what one of the three said: "Caste does not exist in America. Shades of social difference do, stemming from advantages—or the lack of them—in training. But these differences usually are so superficial that in the case of intelligent persons, they can be erased in a year or two. This young man automatically puts himself outside the 'caste' he pretends to belong to, in behaving so snobbishly toward the girl. I don't care what his background is; by his very attitude, he labels himself an outsider, a pretender, a hanger-on.

"Persons of his class, by which I mean persons born to and brought up in a tradition of gentle manners, with money enough to maintain an advantageous social position, usually are altogether unaffected; the first to recognize the kind of quality this girl possesses; the first to recognize the out-and-out appeal of simple good manners in plain people.

"This man is just one of those asses of whom there are a number at large in Washington. I have heard more of that kind of talk here than anywhere else in the world." (The speaker, by the way, is a member of "first families" both here and in England, and has lived all over the world). "I, who yield to nobody in point of ancestry, feel shamed that any person who lays claim to 'ancestry' should be such an ass himself. If there is any satisfaction in ancestry, it should be the consolatory reflection—in times of stress in our personal lives—that what has been done can be done again."

Here is a concurring pithy point of view, from a person whose forbears clutter the history books: "The man's not fit for the girl to marry. Some of his ancestors may have been. He takes the attitude that the difference between him and the girl was settled in heaven. That isn't true and never has been true. Every aristocracy is constantly being filled in from below. If it wasn't, it wouldn't last very long; nor be a very effective force in society. People rise by virtue of their individual merit. How else did our first illustrious ancestor get where he got?"

And here is another, from the plain spoken younger generation: "The man's a louse. He's trying to make the girl. Let her tell him to go to—well, blazes. If she's had three years' university training and a decent home background; and is so attractive that he 'loves her to distraction' and 'cannot live without her'—what's he squawking about? What's he holding back for? I'll bet she could cut as much of a social figure as he does—if that's any compliment."

As for what I, personally, think of this man's attitude—well, you may put me down as going along with the three who will have none of it. Like you, I come from a geographical area "where no sharp class distinctions exist, and where my hereditary membership in the great 'Middle Class' has never been considered socially prejudicial. But, more fortunately than you, I have never uncovered so arrant a snob among my immediate associates.

However, if I had, I think my immediate reaction would have been to keep as much distance between us as possible, as the only feasible action under the circumstances. For I would have recognized the fact that our respective sets of standards and values were hopelessly irreconcilable, and that each would be happier out of the presence of the other. In my scheme of things, there is no place for consciously condescending patronage—from any human being to any other human being. Either you accept people on faith, for the merit you see, as your own kind—or you let them flow by you, without undue effort at adaptation.

A Woman's New York

by Alice Hughes

New York, Jan. 27.

AT LONG last the boss cops of our excellent police force have weeded out the culls and rejects from the hundreds of ladies here you yearned and worked to become copettes. You may remember that thousands of local darlings tried to make the varsity—about 40 vacancies — and were put through courses of mental and physical sprouts that would daunt the most dauntless.

ALICE HUGHES

Now that the list of eligibles has been cut right to the bone, I thought it high time I investigated the select group which soon will be entitled to wear badges, carry pistols and march that naughty man to the jail house by the scruff of his evil neck. (And get a pension when they retire from the onerous life of a lady constable.) The first and prettiest I met was one Miss Gertrude Deborah Tannenbaum, who lives in the teeming Bronx with her papa, a butter and egg dealer, and who wears a Phi Beta Kappa as a smart student of our Hunter College. Papa didn't like Gertrude to give up the thought of teaching school for a life on the cops, but when his chick placed third on the eligible list he was reconciled. "I simply told papa there was no glamour and excitement in teaching English," she tells me. "And I won."

Gertrude is 5 feet 6, dark and very good looking. Also unengaged, romantically speaking. Since she is bent on becoming a policewoman here, she looks with interest upon the handsome young men in blue who work from Head Cop Valentine. She admits, with no pressure, that she would not object to marrying a policeman, providing he permits her to carry on her own job. She will be capped and gowned out of Hunter next month, and then it is heigho, for the police force. Her requirements are simple enough, I suppose. He must be tall, blue-eyed, blond (for contrast), intelligent, and like sports. So hail Lady Cop Tannenbaum. I'll let you know how she makes out!

By the way, what is this season called "spring?" Any sign of it, out your way? . . . A collector of names in a small way, I am always on the lookout for ladies who have attempted matrimony several times. This week's winner, in my name book, is Eleanor Close Hutton Sturges Gautier Rand—whose mother is now Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of our Ambassador to Belgium. Mrs. Etcetera Rand, still not yet 30, is reported by local gossips to be on the brink of a fourth attempt to double harness, and they name the gentleman as Mr. Leon Barzin. Miss Eleanor is blonde and a charmer, and it is hoped that her fourth whack at matrimony will bring her lasting happiness. Who wants to bet?

Tact Needed to Handle Jobless Husband

Ten rules for keeping a jobless husband happy and making things easier for the wife who supports him are offered in an article entitled "In the Luxury to Which He Is Accustomed," by Henrietta Stone in the February Independent Woman, published by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

They are: See that he continues to be head of the house; use the very royal "we" in discussing affairs; show an amiable interest in his results at job-seeking; cultivate in yourself a relaxation of spirit that gives room for growth and change; let your husband protect and cherish you to the highest possible degree; insist that he spend money on his clothes; don't kill yourself by unnecessary overwork; use tact in admiring the possessions of others; keep your eyes open for contacts for him, and get him a dog.

Polish Envoy and Lewises Are Hosts at Tea Parties

Count Potocki Honors Mme. de Romer, and Exhibits Her Portraits; Senator Lucas And Wife Are Complimented at Mayflower

A great big tea and a middle-sized tea kept society on the jump yesterday afternoon between 5 and 7.

The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, was host in honor of Mme. Anna de Romer, artist sister-in-law of Mme. Witold Wankowicz, wife of the Counselor of the embassy, and Senator and Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis gave a large party at the Mayflower for Senator and Mrs. Scott Lucas, of their home State, Illinois.

Informality was the keynote of the Polish party. There was no receiving line and not more than half a hundred guests—it takes at least that many to make an embassy cozy.

Mme. de Romer has been trying to hold an exhibit of her portraits at some gallery in Washington, but as they are all booked up for weeks ahead, the Ambassador suggested an exhibit of her work at the embassy. Pictures were placed about the drawing room walls, and many subjects were there to see themselves. There was Mrs. Kent Legare, who is portrayed in a honey colored satin evening dress, and who yesterday was muffled in a magnificent fox cape over her black frock; Countess van Rechteren Limpurg, also in black, with a little snood on her hat; and several others.

Other portraits shown were those of Mme. Wennerberg, wife of the Counselor of the Swedish legation; Miss Mabel Boardman, and Marcus and Melissa Woodring, the blonde children of the Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring.

Art Connoisseurs Among Those Present

The large table in the embassy dining room was loaded with thin sandwiches, and tea, orange juice and other delicacies were served. Bright fires burned on all the hearths.

Mme. Wankowicz wore a smart black dress with a little white feather on her hat. Her sister-in-law was also in black, with a face veil on her hat.

Everybody was commenting yesterday on how much like sisters appeared Mrs. Millard Tydings and Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, who are both blonde, about the same height, and who arrived together. Mrs. Tydings' hat was of black velvet trimmed with pale blue ostrich feathers, and Mrs. Lloyd's had pale pink ostrich tips at the front of the brim and yards of veiling floating behind.

Mrs. Truxtun Beale was even more distinguished than usual in a gray silk frock with a chinchilla cape and chinchilla trimming on her gray velvet toque. Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, another connoisseur of art, wore a dark gray velvet suit with a sable scarf and a small hat trimmed with two wings.

Others present were Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom, the latter wearing a brief fur cape; charming Mrs. Victor Mallet, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of the British Embassy, who was chatting with Miss Marion Trumbull, in a black frock with a jacket of monkey fur; smart Mrs. Marion Warburg, Mrs. John Caswell and Mrs. John Newbold, who topped off her ensemble with a brief silver fox jacket.

Others were Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, in black; Kemper Simpson, Clarence Hewes, Mrs. J. L. Houghteling in a figured lame blouse with a velvet skirt; Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse; the Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Boncesco, and many others.

Several Hundred At Lewis Tea

You could run through most of the Social Register, the diplomatic list, and the Congressional Directory and have found the owners of the names listed at Mrs. Lewis' tea. Over 400 gathered in the main dining room of the Mayflower to chat and sample from three buffet tables, to the music of Sidney's Orchestra.

Senator Lewis and Senator Lucas broke away from the Hill in time to receive with their wives. Mrs. Lewis wore a fringed crepe gown in a Dubonnet shade, with a corsage of gardenias, and Mrs. Lucas was in grey crepe with a corsage of orchids.

Pouring tea were Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Harold Ickes, Mrs. Warren R. Austin, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who wore a bright red frock; Mrs. George Marye, Mrs. Mark Bristol; Miss Mary Patten, in black with a bright blue plume on her wide-brimmed hat, and Miss Carolyn Nash.

Seen there were Dr. Hans Thomsen, Charge d'Affaires of the German Embassy; the Misses Josephine and Helen Patten, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem, Mrs. Eldridge Jordan with three carnations pinned to her furs; Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Mr. and Mrs. John O. Herrick and Mrs. J. Fred Essary.

Others present were the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy, the Marquis of Sant Orsola; Mrs. Ollie James, Judge and Mrs. Harry Blair, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer and Miss Lelia Meem Peachy.

Senator Lucas was a member of the House until elected to his new office last November.

Mme. Ertegun Has 'At Home'

High on the hill over Rock Creek Park, just as dusk approached last evening, Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, received Washington's official, diplomatic and residential society at her first "at home" of the season.

In the drawing room of the Embassy, against the background of ivory walls and creamy damask, stood Mme. Ertegun to greet her guests. She wore a gown of green gold lace, fashioned with a peplum, a skirt of black velvet and a black tasseled girdle. With this she wore emerald earrings, and she carried a small handbag of lame to match the gown.

In the great hall at the head of the carved and paneled stairway was the tea table, centered with an enormous bowl of tulips, iris, roses, narcissus and a variety of spring flowers. The table itself was loaded with a variety of special Turkish dishes and pastries. At another table were champagne and whisky sodas.

The large ballroom, which in previous years has been open, was closed yesterday afternoon, and peeking through the grillwork one found that in the center of the ballroom was set up a large ping-pong table.

Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss was among the earlier arrivals, and wore a brown velvet suit with a matching, plumed felt hat and accessories of the same shade. Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, was also there, gowned in slate blue, and Mme. Benech was also an early arrival.

A number of the cabinet set, turned out, including Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, and former Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper. Mrs. Claude Pepper was noted, as were Mrs. James E. Hughes and Mrs. Robert Love Taylor.

Assisting at the coffee table were Mrs. Ernest Draper, Mrs. Mark Bristol, Mrs. Charles C. Drake and Mrs. Ames McVeagh. At the tea table were Mme. Bilmanis, who was in brown with sables; Mme. Fotitch, gowned in purple with matching accessories; Mme. Hurban and Mme. Naumoff.

Also arriving early were the newly appointed Japanese Ambassador and Mme. Kensuke Horinouchi, Mme. Horinouchi, all in black with coat and hat of Persian lamb.

Mme. Peter, wife of the Swiss Minister, was most attractively gowned in black with a silver fox scarf tied at her throat, and Frau von Boetticher, wife of the Military Attache of the German Embassy, wore plum color. Most of the Embassies and legations, with the notable exception of the Spanish were represented.

The well-dressed guests were Signora Cosmelli, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of the Italian Embassy, and Mme. Babes, wife of the Counselor of the Rumanian Embassy. Mme. Modify Neutrality Act, Lady Layton Urges Here

Washington A. A. U. W. Branch Told U. S. Action on This Line Would 'Be Something The Aggressors Would Not Like to Face'

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Modification of this country's neutrality act would put a serious crimp in the ambitions of aggressor nations, Lady Dorothea Layton, of London, noted peace worker, told members of the Washington branch of the American Association of University Women yesterday. Speaking at a luncheon in her honor given by the international relations committee of the Washington A. A. U. W., she declared such action would offer a situation the aggressors would not like to face.

"There ought to be an understanding, and that right soon," she declared, "so that if Great Britain has to take a stand against the aggressors it will not be hampered by the fact that this country will not take sides. Modification of the neutrality act would show you had decided which side was right and that would be something the aggressors would not like to face.

Haven't Tested Defenders' Strength

"So far, just how strong a really powerfully armed country would be as a defender, they don't know. We won't give their victims any arms, that's why oppression and bluff continue.

"If the whole power of this country were behind it, the modification of the neutrality act would put a brake on the situation. You have it in your power to hinder or to help."

Lady Layton declared that if the United States fails to modify its neutrality bill and, in economic life, fails to take responsibility "because it does not affect you," a stand will be made, "but it will destroy much you want and need as much as we do.

"We hate the knowledge we are helping Japan today—helping Germany and Italy against the Spanish government—but unless we lead in the other direction we shall go on being used as tools for something we detest."

Stand Would Aid Other Peoples

In taking a stand against the policies of dictators, England and the United States would not only be protecting their own interests and ideals, said Lady Layton, but would also be helping the mass of people in totalitarian countries.

Miss Josephine Schain, chairman of the recent Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, also was a guest of honor at the luncheon. Mrs. Robert Oleson, president of the Washington branch, opened the program, and Mrs. John Donaldson, chairman of the international relations committee, presided.

Before introducing Lady Layton, Mrs. Donaldson presented Mrs. F. Harris Metcalfe, of Providence, R. I., who told briefly of a peace library she is assembling. It already contains 1,000 books dealing with the ideologies of different countries, and newspaper and magazine clippings for some years past, showing the growth of the peace movement.

Australia, U. S. Should Unite To Aid Peace, Says Miss Rich

Impressed by the similarity in the governments and thinking of Australia and the United States, Miss Ruby Rich, of Sydney, internationally known peace worker, believes the two countries cannot combine too quickly nor too sincerely their efforts to promote peace and democracy.

Miss Rich came to America primarily for the Intercontinental Conference of Women Leaders which was to have been held in connection with the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War. She was not discouraged to find it had been postponed, when she arrived at the end of her long journey. "We hope to be able to have it this time next year," she said, and has been attending the cause and cure of war sessions instead.

Pointing out that Australia's constitution is based on that of the United States, she emphasized the similarities between the two countries and the bond of understanding and sympathy which should exist between them. The Pan-American Airways will cut the distance between this country and New Zealand to four days, she said and bring Australia within a week of this continent.

"I am impressed most, she observed "by the way your nation is coming out of isolation, realizing what Australia had to learn also. Whether we like it or not, the world is a unit."

Miss Rich who is an ardent feminist as well as a peace worker, and a former member of the board of Equal Rights International, is staying at Alva Belmont House, headquarters of the National Woman's Party, while she is in the Capital. Although she uses her maiden name, she has a distinguished husband in the background, Dr. Maurice Schalit, a psychiatrist and doctor of medicine, who shares her interest in international movements for peace, equal rights and health.

She has written a pageant-drama, "Tomorrow—Every Women's Peace Play," which was produced in South Wales. It dramatizes the four parts of the International Peace Campaign by linking the women's work and showing how the ideal of tomorrow—the building of peace—may be realized.

Sales Taxes Again Loom In Maryland

Legislators Face Onerous Proposal As Alternative to Income Levy Hike

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 27.—Retail sales taxes, fighting words in prior legislatures, threaten to embroil the current session again.

Fivefold increases in individual income taxes proposed by Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, lent impetus to discussion of retail sales tax possibilities to cushion the present heavy tax load on real estate and the recommended boosts in income taxes.

Sales tax proposals are still in the discussion stage, and no bills have been ordered prepared. However, several delegates are flirting with the idea, and others have openly expressed approval.

It was pointed out that prior estimates placed the probable revenue from a 1- per cent sales tax at $5,000,000 annually.

Home 'Folks' Contacted

The fate of the sales tax, should one be introduced, was held to depend largely on the sentiment for or against the proposed 2½ per cent tax on individual incomes. Legislators are now in their constituencies among the "home folks" and by the time the Legislature reconvenes Tuesday should have polled public opinion on the income tax boosts.

Whether the electorate would "hold still" for a whopping increase in the income tax rate in preference to a minimum sales tax is the question agitating legislators. Maryland finances, O'Conor has declared, demand new tax revenues, and it is simply a question of weighing the onerousness of any new revenue measures.

Proponents of the sales tax say it is also needed as "insurance" against a possible State deficit at the end of 1941.

Budget analysts pointed out that O'Conor's budget balance is dependent on a number of "ifs." If the legislature approves his fiscal program exactly as submitted, and if the proposed revenue measures return estimated revenues, his budget would balance in 1941.

Failed Once Before

But it is also pointed out that many of the similar taxes levied as relief measures failed by $800,000 to meet expected estimates in fiscal 1938. Any depression in business would throw the whole program out of balance.

In his budget message, O'Conor also proposed to transfer $2,000,000 from the present $3,600,000 Treasury surplus and apply it to current expenses to balance his first budget. Legislators quickly looked ahead two years and said $2,000,000 in additional revenues would need to be found for that biennium to balance the 1942-43 budget, as the $2,000,000 "borrowed" from the surplus will not be available then.

With all other sources of revenue explored, it was argued that the sales tax alone could make up the added revenues which must be found then.

There was almost an entire absence of activity at the statehouse today, Gov. O'Conor was in Baltimore and only a few legislators remained in Annapolis to work at their desks.

Cuts Staff's Pay

Gov. O'Conor's $95,000,000 economy budget hit close to home by recommending salary slashes for two important members of his official family.

A study of the budget recommendations for 1940-41, submitted by the Governor to the Legislature Wednesday, showed O'Conor promised to trim $400 from the salary of his executive secretary, Elmer J. Hammer, and $100 annually from the stipend of Mrs. Isabelle Nix, his personal secretary.

Total costs of O'Conor's executive department exactly matched the appropriation of $73,350 given Harry W. Nice in the 1938-39 session.

Another of the many posts which would be abolished if O'Conor's budget is approved would be that of secretary-treasurer of the board of welfare, at a saving of $4,500 a year.

Apparently to care for new construction at Annapolis, such as the State office building now being built, an additional $7,000 annually was provided for watchmen in the department of the superintendent of buildings and grounds.

Fire Battalion Chief Wells To Retire After 33 Years

Capt. Berry Will Succeed to His Post; Careers of Two Men Alike Through Long Service; Change Set for February 1

For many years the careers of Battalion Chief Charles A. Wells, of the Seventh Battalion, District Fire Department, and Capt. Frank G. Berry, of No. 4 Truck Company, have paralleled.

WELLS

Yesterday Capt. Berry was appointed successor to Chief Wells, who will retire on February 1, after 33 years' service, because of physical disability.

Both were born and educated here, appointed to the same company (No. 14 Engine) within a year of each other and returned to their first stations as battalion chiefs.

Friends since their rookie days, they have seen action at every large fire for more than 30 years.

Chief Berry, who is 55, lives at 228 Eighth street southeast. He was appointed to the force one year before his predecessor, and has been acting battalion chief for ten years.

"It was a great thrill to hear that I really have the job now, and I couldn't follow a better man," he said yesterday. "I guess I won't change much, though; I'm just a fireman at heart."

Chiefs Wells, who is 65 years old and makes his home at 5220 Fifth street northwest, was appointed in 1906 and was made chief in 1934. He has been commended many times for outstanding service, including his work during the Knickerbocker Theater disaster, in 1922, and the Kann Co. warehouse fire, in 1925. He personally turned in the sixth alarm at the fire that in 1906 destroyed the Academy of Music at Ninth and D streets northwest, where the Strand Theater now stands.

BERRY

When his retirement becomes effective, he said yesterday, he will spend his time resting up and "just loafing" in the winter, and fishing and boating at his summer home at Colonial Beach, Va.

Synod Votes To Depose Rev. Lowe

Winchester Pastor Found Guilty of Misconduct; Not Allowed to Resign

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 27.—The Lutheran Synod of Virginia by unanimous vote today deposed the Rev. C. Worthington Lowe, suspended pastor of Grace Lutheran Church in Winchester, from the ministry.

The action was taken in executive session on recommendation of a committee on discipline that investigated undisclosed charges against the young bachelor minister.

Lowe was suspended last May by Dr. J. J. Scherer, of Richmond, synod president, after a committee of clergymen investigated charges preferred by the council of Grace Church had held the minister guilty of "flagrant transgressions."

Dr. Scherer said that today's action finally disposes of the case, as the synod was the highest tribunal of the church.

Following the executive session and just before the synod recessed at noon, the Rev. John W. Shuey, of Kingsport, Tenn., led a prayer for the deposed minister.

Following his suspension, Mr. Lowe and a number of Grace Church members organized the "Lutheran Church of Our Savior," at Winchester. At a congregational meeting he was extended a call and accepted.

He also announced that he had resigned as pastor of Grace Church and as a member of the synod, but Dr. Scherer replied that a minister could not resign "while under discipline."

The penalty of deposition was the maximum which could be given under the synod constitution.

When informed at Winchester by newspapermen of the synod's action, Lowe said that "I have nothing to say at the present time and shall not have until official word is received from the synod. When such word is received I shall have a statement for the newspapers."

$9,000,000 Auditorium Approved

Planning and Fine Arts Commissions Jointly Indorse Huge Civic Project

The proposal for a $9,000,000 civic auditorium for Washington at the Municipal Center was indorsed yesterday at a joint session of the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission.

A bill to provide for the structure, which would seat 20,000, was introduced in Congress by Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, on January 20.

The commissions also approved plans for an armory and sports center in Anacostia which could also be used as an auditorium.

Construction of a $3,500,000 Census Bureau Building in the Southwest Federal building area also was approved. The new building will be six stories high and will house 7,000 workers.

The commissions further approved plans for the proposed Smithsonian Gallery of Art, to be located across the Mall from the Mellon Gallery, now under construction.

Plans were presented and indorsed for a District library at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, and for the new War Department Building to be constructed at Twenty-first street and Virginia avenue northwest.

Sanders.

Anacostia Citizens

The plan of Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, to tax the Federal Government in proportion to property owned in the District was approved last night by the Anacostia Citizens Association, meeting at the Junior and Senior High School.

The association also favored continuance of parking meters, with the provision that 20-minute meters be abolished in favor of a universal 1-hour time limit. A delegation was authorized to appear before the Public Utilities Commission next month opposing change in taxicab zones.

3 Card Players Lose Pants, $150 To Robber Pair

Although it started out as a friendly threesome, a pinochle game last night cost three Washingtonians a total of $150.50, two watches and three pairs of pants when two armed bandits abruptly broke up the playing.

The robbers, both young men, stepped into a room on the second floor of 623 E street northwest and ordered the card players to strip. Joseph Rosinski, proprietor of a boarding house at that address; Saul Levine, of 647 Irving street northwest, and Saul E. Eonson, of 421 Fourth street northwest, were forced to comply.

The bandits went through all pants pockets, but on leaving decided to take the trousers along, too. Rosinski lost $133 and a gold watch; Levine, $16 and a watch, and Eonson, $1.50. The robbers fled on foot.

Earlier, an armed man had held up Wade Holland, night manager of a gas station in 1100 block Twentieth street northwest, and cleaned the cash till of $20.

Ezekial Urges 9-Point Program In Jobs for All

Co-operation of labor, industry and Government for "democratic economic planning" offers "the most feasible long-time approach to jobs for all," Mordecai Ezekial, economic adviser to the Agriculture Department, said last night at a meeting of the Bookshop Association. He was discussing his new book, "Jobs for All."

The Government, he said, should underwrite "the resulting programs of expansion," and he suggested a nine-point "framework" on which to build a program for concerted industrial expansion. This framework would include a national income goal, expanding from $80,000,000,000 annually, to be attained by Government co-ordination of management, labor and consumer to increase production, income and consumption.

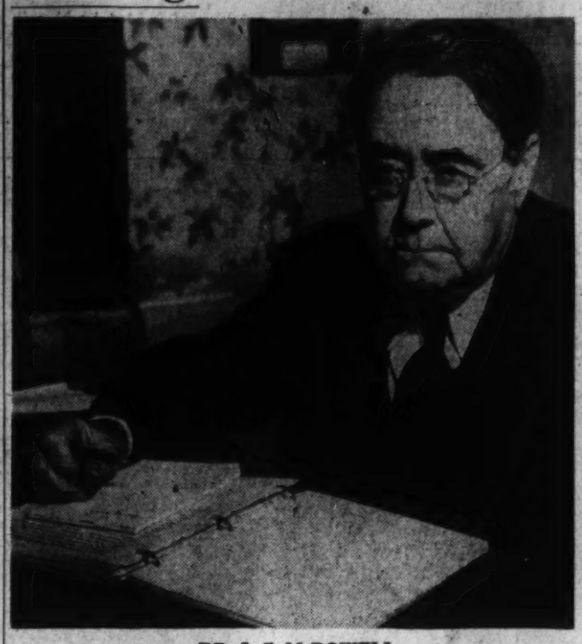
Life Begins at 70 . . . .



DR. J. C. McDOWELL

Dr. McDowell's Love of Writing Makes Retirement More Joyful

(The Biblical "three score and ten" has been interpreted as a working span, not a life's limit, by the men and women whose accomplishments will be described in this series. Forty, fifty and more years they have been producing and they're recognizing no "stop" light now. Some of them you must know yourself. Don't keep their names a secret. Let us know your candidates for "Life Begins at 70."—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

"I want to suggest Dr. J. C. McDowell, 1416 Allison street northwest," wrote the Rev. H. W. Burgan, minister of Hamline Methodist Episcopal Church. "He is now writing a book and is engaged in many other activities. He will prove very interesting to you."

You were right about your parishioner, Mr. Burgan. And here is a funny coincidence: The very first thing Dr. McDowell did after he was retired for age from the Department of Agriculture on December 31, 1937, was write a magazine article on his view that one doesn't really begin to live until he reaches 70.

And it has not turned out to be a case of the wish mothering the thought! With 13 months experience as a septuagenarian, Dr. McDowell says he has never worked harder or had more real enjoyment in his life.

Just now he is finishing the manuscript of his American history book, upon which he started working seriously when he was retired from the Bureau of Dairy Industry as chief of the division of dairy herd improvement. He is the author of several books and articles on farming and dairying but none was as much fun in the writing as the present volume, which will attempt to tell the narrative of this country in story and anecdote.

All His Time Goes to Hobby

"Yes, I am 70 and I am just beginning to give all my time to my hobby," Dr. McDowell wrote in that magazine article, published in a dairymen's journal, a year ago. "The years to come are to be the happiest of my life."

A tall, sturdily built man, born on a backwoods farm in central Wisconsin on Christmas Day in 1867, he has been a Washington resident since 1912. Here, at American University, he earned his master's and doctor's degrees to go with the B. S. in agriculture he received from the University of Wisconsin in 1903.

During most of his 30 years in the Department of Agriculture—from 1908 until 1912 he was a Wisconsin field agent—he wrote books and articles on the side. He co-authored "Dairy Enterprises," published in 1930 and revised in 1936, and "Elements of Agriculture," a textbook that came out in 1914.

And here's a little secret: Dr. McDowell has been, and still is, a ghost writer. Many of his magazine pieces in the trade journals bear his name but as many, if not more, have come out under someone else's by-line.

Three Children Have Degrees

So if you are curious to know what a 71-year-old ghost writer looks like, he is over 6 feet in height, as friendly as a puppy, does his own typing but relies on his wife to handle punctuation and the literary criticism. Mrs. McDowell is apologetic because her husband and their three children all are college trained and she doesn't have a degree to her name, but dad has given her to understand she couldn't be more valuable as a revisionist if she had one.

Dr. McDowell rises around 7:30 a. m. daily and is at his desk, on the second floor of the couple's six-room house, by 9 o'clock. He breaks up the afternoon with a nap.

"Taking a nap," he says, "makes two short, snappy days out of one long, dreary one."

Frequently it is midnight or later when he puts down his pencil and covers the typewriter. He is not a touch typist but "I can make time with my own special version of the hunt-and-peck system."

All of which is not a bad hint to take right now.

PRINCE GEORGES COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, 42 University rd., Calvert Hills, Md. Telephone GReenwood 3158.

Resentment that its cash contributions had been used to purchase soap, towels and other school necessities was expressed last night by the Prince Georges Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations, meeting at the University of Maryland.

After numerous members declared that such contributions should be used only for athletic and playground equipment, hot lunches and other items not covered in the county and State school budgets, the association directed its president, Dr. R. C. Wiley, to appoint a committee to consider taking the matter up with the school board.

The federation was told the Oxon Hill Parent Teacher Association had voted unanimously to ask a tax increase to care for school necessities.

The federation voted unanimously to indorse action of its executive committee approving proposed salary increases for State public school teachers.

To Discuss New Roads

College Park—Road building and maintenance will be the theme of the monthly meeting of the Prince Georges Chamber of Commerce Monday night at the Lord Calvert Inn here.

Walter F. Mulligan, chairman of the chamber's road committee, announced the program would include addresses by Joseph Chaney, Prince Georges County district engineer of the State roads commission; J. A. Bromley, Anne Arundel County road engineer, and Hugh C. Bickford, president of the Southern Maryland Citizens Association.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Jan. 27.—Higher wage scales for Maryland's public school teachers were urged today by the Maryland Congress of Parents and Teachers.

In a resolution passed by the organization's board, support for restoration of salary cuts to their 1933 level was voiced.

Copies of the resolution, asking for enactment of legislation providing a more adequate schedule of minimum salaries for the State's teachers, were to be forwarded to Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor and to officers of the Legislature.

Stengel Favors Exempting U. S. Workers From Tax

Citing that neither the President nor members of Congress pay State income taxes, Col. Charles I. Stengel, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, last night told members of the District department, meeting at the Hamilton Hotel, there was no reason they should.

"All Government workers who make an adequate salary pay a Federal income tax," he said, "and that is all their Representatives pay. Why should they pay more?"

Birdhouse Keeper Of Zoo to See Sights He Missed

Malcolm Davis, keeper of the Zoo's birdhouse, plans to see the sights he missed a year and a half ago when he shipped halfway around the world practically without emerging from the hold of a freighter.

Dr. William M. Mann, Zoo director, yesterday announced Davis would sail from New York February 11 for Calcutta to fetch an Indian rhinoceros. The specimen is now on deposit in the Calcutta Zoo.

The birdhouse keeper was a member of the Smithsonian-National Geographic expedition to the East Indies in 1937, which returned with more than 1,000 mammals, birds and reptiles. Davis scarcely had a chance to come on deck for air, so busy was he with the birds in the hold. This time Davis hopes, there will be stops at Port Sudan, Ceylon, Madras and elsewhere.

Eastern Defeats Roosevelt, 26-22, to Take Lead in Series

March Championship Fight Out; Promoter Must Obtain Tony's Previous Contract

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 27.—The Daily Mirror says that Promoter Mike Jacobs today arranged to match Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis against Tony Galento, the pudgy Orange, N. J., belter, for a title fight in one of the New York baseball parks June 29.

Although no announcement is planned for some time, the Mirror says it learned from an authentic source that the fight was agreed upon today and that Jacobs plans to tie up Galento in a five-year contract in event he should win the title.

Herman Taylor, Philadelphia promoter, already holds a five-year contract for Tony's services and in order to complete the arrangements it will be necessary to obtain a release from this. Jacobs plans to offer to "lend" Taylor some boxers for his Philadelphia shows as well as to make cash payments for the release.

As a result of these negotiations, plans for a Louis fight in March have been abandoned. Galento, however, will carry out his tour, which includes matches in Detroit and Miami.

Joe Jacobs, Galento's manager, said that the deal had been "on the fire" for some time but that the definite date named by the Mirror was "all news" to him.

Negotiations for the match were being delayed, Joe explained, because Mike Jacobs didn't want to "take care" of Taylor in regard to his contract with Galento. "But eventually he'll have to do it," Manager Jacobs added, "because that's the only fight that'll make any money."

Eastern and Wilson Win Series Games

Riders Lose, 26-22; Western Bows, 19-18 Hancock and Lassise Star Before 3,500

By Bill Burnett.

Roosevelt High, a hot favorite to lead all other interhigh teams into the championship tournament next month, faltered and fell before a stretch-running Eastern five last night at Tech, 26-22, while more than 3,500 excited fans cheered themselves into varying degrees of hoarseness. It was the last game of a double-header, Woodrow Wilson's green-clad Presidents keeping their record for the series unmarred in the opener, 19-18, over Western.

Credit for Eastern's victory, its third in the abbreviated series, probably rests with Ralph Lassise, a substitute playing his senior year of basketball. He single-handedly pulled Eastern out of a 9-8 deficit at the intermission and staked the defending champions to a wide enough lead to coast the rest of the way. Immediately after the third period whistle, Lassise broke out of a huddle of players for a neat snowbird, and followed it up with a follow shot on Bup Battiste's miss.

Riders Get Scores

For several minutes the tousle-headed cager rested, allowing George West and George Zuras, of the Rough Riders, to ring up a basket apiece, but he soon took up scoring again, adding three or more points in this flurry.

The final period, a desperate one on the part of Roosevelt, was a scoring match between the Riders' West and Hancock, of the interhigh defenders. Eastern's 20-15 lead after the third quarter faded to a mere 21-19 lead under the efforts of West, but Hancock stepped it with two neat set shots to put Eastern comfortably ahead.

Individual scoring honors went to Eastern's captain, Hancock. His 12 points overshadowed West's total by 2 points. Hymie Perlo, of the losers, played one of the finest defensive games of his two-year career, backed by Billy Robertson and a surprise star, George Zuras. Battiste, assigned to guard West, was caught in several blunders in an effort to stop the Rider's brilliant play.

Opener Is Thriller

Because of the slim margin in the opening engagement, it was probably the most interesting of the two for unbiased customers. It opened inauspiciously with neither team holding a sizeable margin, first quarter score being 6 to 5 in favor of Wilson. Western was able to tally 2 more points than the Presidents in the second quarter, and found itself leading, 10 to 9, at the half.

That lead was stretched another point in the third period, Western proudly clinging to a 16-to-14 lead as the critical fourth began. The advantage was good until almost half of the final session had ticked away, and then Caldwell McCormick, Wilson sub, knotted the count on a difficult follow shot. Don Maloney, one of the three veterans left from last year, hoisted Wilson into a 19-to-16 lead with barely 2 minutes of the game remaining, ending Wilson's scoring. Bobby Holloran sliced the margin to 1 solitary point with a frantic heave from center court.

Max Schmeling Says He's Still Louis' Master

MAX SCHMELING

Wants Another Bout To Prove It; Sails Today for U. S.

Copyright, 1939, by the United Press.

Paris, Jan. 27.—Max Schmeling sails for the United States tomorrow to try to get a September fight with Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis and wipe from his record the stain of the one-round knockout he suffered at the hands of the Brown Bomber.

"I am Joe Louis' master and I will prove it again," Schmeling said in an exclusive interview with the United Press on the eve of his departure for New York aboard the Normandie.

Laughing at reports that he had been in trouble with the German government, Schmeling said, "I am going to New York in order to show them that I am still alive."

Practically Well Now

"I have just come back from moose hunting," Schmeling said. "I weigh 196 pounds, only 3 more than I did when I fought Louis the last time. I've been a long time recovering from the back injury that Louis gave me. I was in a hospital for 14 days and I took treatments for months, but I am practically well now. All the time since then I have been training and living outdoors."

Schmeling's black eyes flashed when Louis' name was mentioned.

"I will never quit with that defeat on my record," he said. "I am Louis' master and I will prove it again. I don't care about the money, but I can lick Joe Louis. I proved it once and I will prove it again. I want to show my American friends that Max Schmeling is as good as ever.

"Yes, I will fight Joe Louis again. I had no excuse the last time, no alibi. "Joe paralyzed me with a punch to the back, but he's got to land 20 blows to the jaw before he knocks me down. But in that last fight I found I could not move. I could not get away. I could think, but I couldn't move. I know Joe didn't hit me purposely in the spine. It was an accident."

Max Is 33 Now

Schmeling was asked how old he was.

"I was 33 last September," he said. "But what's age? You are always only as old as you feel. I have taken good care of myself."

There were rumors in Paris that Schmeling was going to the United States to live. He laughed when he was told about them.

"What about my wife?" he asked. "She lives in Germany. That's where I live, too. I have many friends in America, but I will live in my own country. They are always saying things about me. Before this they were saying that I was in a concentration camp. That's all bunk."

Max said he expected to return to Germany late in February.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

On the day that Jack Dempsey was at his best, Joe Louis would have licked him. Don't shoot, Dempsey fans. That is not this department's belief, but the published opinion of Mr. Arthur Donovan, the fight referee. Mr. Donovan is very positive. He goes off the deep end for Louis, furthermore, by saying the Detroit Negro is the greatest fighter who ever pulled on a glove.

That Donovan will get an argument is certain. There are, in this country, certain folks who will insist as long as they can draw a breath that Jack Dempsey was the greatest fighter who ever lived. And they will never accept even the possibility that Joe Louis could have licked the 24-year-old dynamiter who blasted Jess Willard off the heavyweight throne that July afternoon in Toledo, 1919.

POVICH

Donovan, who is invariably the choice of the New York Boxing Commission as the referee whenever Joe Louis fights in New York, asserts that "I know more about what Joe Louis does to a man than anybody else because I've been right next to him while he was doing it . . . I say that the Joe Louis who smashed up Schmeling and John Henry Lewis could have beaten any fighter who ever lived, including Dempsey."

And then Donovan commits what, to Dempsey fans, is sheer heresy. He says: "Dempsey was not a natural fighter. Why, that left jab of Joe's alone would have been enough to beat him. Dempsey had only strength and speed and a punch, but not a harder punch than Joe's."

If They Had Met

One of the everlasting misfortunes of the prize ring industry is that Jack Dempsey and Joe Louis came along in different decades. A Dempsey-Louis fight with each at his peak would have dwarfed as a spectacle any of the so-called Battles of the Century. It would have been one bout that would have required no build-up. It could not have been over-written. It would have filled any arena in the world. It undoubtedly would have been the most savage two-man fight in all history and it would, my guess is, have ended in a knockout.

It would have been puncher vs. puncher, fury vs. fury. Retreat is not in the make-up of either man. Somebody would certainly go down under the fusillade of blows. My guess is that it would have been Louis.

Overlooking, for the moment, Donovan's claim that Louis is a harder puncher than was Dempsey, let's investigate the possibilities in another direction. There is evidence that Dempsey could take it far better than Louis. The only time the Old Mauler was ever knocked out was by Jack Flynn in the days when Dempsey was more hobo than fighter, and Dempsey all but admits that he found it expedient to get himself knocked out that night.

About Dempsey's Chin

Dempsey could take it. Even his detractors must acknowledge that. He had to take it. That was his style of fighting. Anything to get in close, where he could do the awful damage he did. Never could Dempsey be accused of having a fragile chin. Luis Firpo, 270 pounds of brawn, clipped Dempsey on that Dempsey chin and what happened? Dempsey was knocked clear out of the ring but he wasn't even stunned. He returned to knock Firpo out in the same round.

For seven rounds, in the sunset of his career against Jack Sharkey in 1927, Dempsey took a horrible pounding from the former sailor. Sharkey, no powder-puff hitter, belted the aging Dempsey around the ring to no avail. Unhurt, Dempsey knocked Sharkey out with the first punch he aimed at Sharkey's chin. Gene Tunney now hailed as a truly great champion, won two decisions over Dempsey but in 20 rounds he failed to put the back-sliding former champ on the floor.

In any hypothetical bout between Dempsey and Louis, Dempsey's imperviousness to punishment must be considered. And Louis cannot boast the same kind of a reputation. The two men who found themselves with a clean shot at Louis's chin, belted him down. Jimmy Braddock had him on the floor with an uppercut at Chicago, and Braddock was never regarded as a potent puncher. Max Schmeling not only knocked Louis down, but he knocked him out.

If such as Braddock and Schmeling could put Louis down then it must be conceded that a Dempsey punch would have spelled the finish for the Negro. Because, despite Donovan's belief that Louis is the harder puncher, that cannot be readily acknowledged. There is another school of thought that will never admit that anybody could punch harder than Dempsey.

Louis Faster Puncher

Louis punches faster. That is agreed. He lashes out with both fists as if they were on coiled springs, and his punches carry terrific authority. But in the crouching Dempsey he would be facing a fellow who does not expose his chin. Dempsey took most of the blows aimed at his jaw on top of his head.

Those people who will never agree that Dempsey was a great fighter will point, of course, to his fights with Tunney and Tommy Gibbons. He was past his peak in both the Tunney fights . . . definitely on the down grade. Against Gibbons, however, he was still supposed to be in his prime, and Gibbons lasted 15 rounds with him at Shelby, Mont., to the surprise of the fight world.

But in the hysteria over Louis' quick knockout of such as Max

28-27 Score Stands When Foul Shot After Gun Fails

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 27.—Petersburg High School took undisputed possession of first place in the central district of the Virginia Class A Conference race tonight by defeating George Washington High, 28-27, in a game that wasn't decided until after time had expired.

Snyder, of the losers, had a chance to send the fray into overtime when he was fouled on the final play of the game. But he missed the shot. His miss nullified a splendid comeback engineered by the Presidents who were trailing, 21-6, at halftime.

The loss dropped George Washington into third place in the conference standings.

Ed Williams was high point scorer for the losers with 8, but Marshall, with 12 and Jacobs, with 11, both of Petersburg, were high for the game.

In a preliminary the George Washington girls overpowered the Arlington Girls Club, 35-13.

It's Very Interesting When You Stop to Figure It Out; Coach Is Well Satisfied

Gilbert Conn, who has taught the boys of Stuart Junior High the rudiments of tumbling for more than five years, wasn't stopped by the question, "What kind of a youngster makes the best tumbler?"

"Generally," he says, "most any kind of kid can learn simple tumbling stunts. No matter whether he is long, short, lean, or broad. But offhand, I'd say it's the stocky boy, well set up, who takes to the sport best."

What about the hundreds of boys at Stuart who can't boast a stocky, well set up figure?

"Naturally," Conn says, "we have sports to take care of them, too. As you know, it takes no particular build to play basketball, soccer and volleyball. Those who have no taste or figure for tumbling go into one of these."

When Conn mentions basketball, volleyball and soccer he just about covers the sports at Stuart Junior High. It isn't that equipment could not be found for other sports, but Conn considers these three the best for boys of junior high age.

"Some athletic directors go in for individual sports like table tennis, fencing, badminton, bowling etc., Conn says. "I don't doubt the value of these pastimes as body builders, but they don't fit into my scheme of teaching youngsters. I think boys at this stage should engage in games in which each has an equal part to play. No one player dominates play."

For this reason, touch football, an increasingly popular sport in the junior schools, is not on the program at Stuart. Directors at the various schools have no rigid course of athletic teaching they must follow as yet, and Gilbert Conn, for one, hopes they won't for some time.

Minor League Boom Ahead; 40 Loops Ready

Three New Leagues Are Formed and Others Are Expanding This Year

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 27.—Three new minor baseball loops were in the making today, boosting to 40 the number of bush leagues awaiting the start of the diamond sport's 100th season.

Joe F. Carr, promotional director of the minors, said the 37 circuits which operated in 1938 were ready to go again, along with the newcomers, and that two of the old leagues, the Arizona-Texas and the Ohio State, would expand from four to six-club loops.

The Pioneer League, composed of Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah; Pocatello, Lewiston, Twin Falls, and Boise, Idaho, is a newcomer for 1939, Carr said, all organization work having been completed.

Other loops almost ready for the "play ball" call are the Wisconsin State, and one made up of western New York and neighboring towns.

Carr said minor league baseball was one of the fastest growing businesses in the country, and that it was on a sounder footing now than ever before. In 1933, when Carr was named promotional director in an attempt to bolster the minor league field, only 12 circuits were in operation outside the majors. Each of the 37 leagues which started the 1937 campaign, 25 of them organized by Carr, completed the season.

"Minor leagues don't fold up like they once did," Carr said, "because we make certain that each has firm financial backing and civic support before we permit it to start."

The roll of minors, not including the three new circuits: Alabama-Florida, American Association, Appalachian, Arizona-Texas, Arkansas-Missouri, Bi-State, Canadian-American, Cape Breton Colliery, Coastal Plains, Cotton States, Eastern, East Texas, Eastern Shore, Evangeline, Florida State, Georgia-Florida, International, Kitty, Mid-Atlantic, Mountain State, Nebraska State, North Carolina State, Northeast Arkansas, Northern, Ohio State, Pacific Coast, Pennsylvania State, Piedmont, South Atlantic, Southeastern, Southern Association, Texas, Texas Valley, Three-Eye, Western Association, Western International and West Teas-New Mexico.

Lewis Retains Light-Heavy N.B.A. Crown

Miller Says He Never Relinquished Title; Fulfilled Requirements

Neither John Henry Lewis' crushing one-round knock-out by the dynamiting paws of Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis, nor the New York Boxing Commission's decision to vacate the former's light-heavyweight throne have affected the Phoenix boy's championship rank in the eyes of the National Boxing Association.

Through the chairman of its ratings committee, Harvey L. Miller, the N. B. A. yesterday announced that Lewis still is recognized as champion in all States and countries with which it is affiliated.

"Prior to the last meeting of the ratings committee," Miller said yesterday, "Gus Greenlee, Lewis' manager, advised us that his fighter had no intention of relinquishing his light-heavyweight title, and would not do so even if he won the heavyweight crown from Joe Louis.

Can't Take His Title

"Lewis has fulfilled every stipulation as set forth by the National Boxing Association concerning his 175-pound crown. All we ask is that he defend the title every six months, and he has done that. If he can make the 175-pound limit—and if he scaled only a little over 180-pounds for the Joe Louis fight I don't see why he can't, and continues to defend his title, we can't take it away from him."

Mr. Miller appeared a bit ruffled at a remark that another break in ranks with the New York commission may occur in the light heavyweight situation.

"What," he inquired, "is the New York commission, a body governing the world? It governs boxing in New York alone, and that may be a large State, but it still is bounded by the Hudson and Buffalo. We aren't interested in New York's so-called "world championships." The N. B. A. takes in more territory than New York, and we are only interested in seeing that boxing is conducted on a high plane, and that the men engaged in boxing receive their just dues in regard to rankings, at least."

Silent on N. Y. Plans

Regarding the situation created by New York's decision to award the title to the winner of a three-man tournament embracing Al Gainor—since eliminated, Tiger Jack Fox and Melio Bettina, Miller had no comment. New York, of course, will recognize the winner of the Fox-Bettina bout coming up, as it champion, but not the N. B. A.

"We can't," the ratings committee chairman pointed out, "name his opponents for him. As long as he defends his title every six months he is living up to the rule."

Johnny Fischer Applauds USGA For Recent Amateur Rulings

Says Action Prevents Sham From Entering Simon-Pure Game

By the Associated Press.

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 27.—Johnny Fischer applauded the United States Golf Association today for drawing a strict line between amateurs and professionals and said its rulings were entirely justified to prevent the Simon-Pure links game from "becoming the sham that amateur tennis is."

The National Amateur champion of 1936 was discussing a recent warning of U. S. G. A. to touring women players not to accept reduced hotel rates, traveling expenses or other favors from resorts staging tournaments.

"The U. S. G. A. isn't out of line at all," he said. Young amateurs don't have to travel around the country to get experience in golf. There are enough tournaments close by for an amateur to play in until he's ready for the big time.

"If he lives in a big city, a boy can play in four or five match play tournaments each summer, any number of invitation events and then at least one big nearby sectional tournament like the Western Amateur and some others.

"After a few years of those tournaments, a boy is ready for the National Amateur and the National Open. Amateur golfers don't have to barnstorm to get ready, and as a matter of fact, I think too many small tournaments hurt a player."

JOHNNY FISCHER

Fischer is here for a week of golf as the guest of Bill Danforth, Boston sportsman, before returning to Cincinnati to practice law.

Bunsa's Clash With Cronin Seen Feature

Virginia Five Meets Old Liners on Court In Program Opener; 4,000 Are Expected

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Worked up to a high state of health and enthusiasm after a week of intensive training, the mitt teams of Maryland and Catholic University will be turned loose in the ring at College Park tonight to swing their way through the fifth annual fistic duel between the schools. One of the winter sports calendar's highlights, a bit of gentlemanly brawling in which upsets are the rule rather than exception, the match will be augmented by a basketball game involving Maryland and Virginia, beginning at 8 o'clock. The twin-bill is expected to lure a capacity audience of 4,000 fans to Ritchie Coliseum, and elaborate preparations have been made to accomodate the crowd.

Boasting the strongest and best balanced array of pugilistic talent enrolled at Maryland since sleek-haired Ivan Nedomatsky and his mates beat a pack of bleary-eyed contenders for the Southern Conference title two years ago, Maryland is a 2-1 favorite to whip its neighboring rival. All positions, save two, are manned by veterans, and the rookies are considered better-than-average workmen. The team that Coach Heine Miller sends inot action also will include a half dozen portside pitchers, and southpaws admittedly are usually poison to the average collegiate boxer.

Alperstein Prominent

Ben Alperstein, national intercollegiate featherweight champion who will fight in the lightweight class, heads the glittering array of material at Miller's command. George Dorr, veteran bantam, will lead off for the Terps, followed in turn by Bob Bradley, Alperstein, Nathan Askin, Frank Cronin, Newton Cox, Bob Lodge and Herman Raisin. Every one carries a lethal punch, and is a polished boxer. They demonstrated their power at Duke's expense earlier in the season, whipping the Blue Devils, 5-3, despite a couple of questionable decisions.

Cronin, serving his apprenticeship in the ring, is hailed as one of the most brilliant boxers discovered at the Old Line School. He is fast and elusive, a good ring general and a puncher. He is, in short, the answer to a coach's proyer. Much hinges on the outcome of his bout tonight, for Cronin will fight at 155 pounds, and the Cardinals' victory hopes are invested in its heavier representatives.

Catholic, however, concedes nothing. Coach Eddie LaFond's men have pulled more than one scorched chestnut from the fire, and the cagey Cardinal tutor hopes to repeat tonight. The team's hopes were dealt a terrific blow when Dave Bernstein, national intercollegiate bantamweight titleholder, was ruled ineligible earlier in the week, and Tony Mesuri suffered a broken nose. Normally a featherweight, Messuri would have replaced Bernstein.

Two woefully inexperienced men will defend Catholic's honor in the 120 and 127 pound classes, but from thereon Maryland will have to show its best to win. Ricardo Fernandez has been nominated for the 120-pound berth, and Lenny Bartone will be entered in the 127-pound division.

Parade Goes On

After that Nestor Martinez, Bill Gearon, a rookie, but a good one; Joe Bunsa, Geary Strang, Fred Stant, anr Jay Turner will parade through the ring—and there's enough dynamite in their fists to sink a battleship. Bunsa, incidentally, will face Cronin, and this shapes up as the evening's most interesting struggle. Bunsa is a clever puncher, and undefeated in college competition.

The Cardinals are one up on their opponents in the matter of victories and defeats, having won two of the four previous engagements, and held Maryland even in another. Catholic scored a surprising victory last year, and the year before pulled an even greater upset by holding Maryland's conference champions to a 4-4 stalemate. Not since the initial match in 1935 has Maryland won, for the Cards carried off the honors in '36, 4½-3½.

Virginia is sending one of its best teams in recent years here for tonight's game. The Cavaliers won five of six games thus far, and figure to give Maryland a run for the money. Maryland has won five of its nine games, showing vast improvement in its most recent starts.

John Marshall Swamps W. & L. By 52-12 Score

Justices Take 31-5 Halftime Lead and Are Never Headed

Richmond, Va., Jan. 27.—John Marshall High School, of Richmond, was too strong for Washington and Lee High, of Arlington, and swamped the visitors, 52-12, in a basketball game here tonight.

Paced by Levin and Thompson who scored 12 and 11 points, respectively, the Justices took a commanding halftime lead of 32-5 and never were threatened. Only three Generals were able to score from the floor against the close defense set up by John Marshall. Harnest, a forward, led the losers with two field goals.

Hoya Trackmen Work for Berths

Four of the six quarter-milers seeking positions on the Georgetwon relay team, which has been picked to represent Washington in an intercity meet with New York and Philadelphia in the Penn Relay games, worked out at the Hilltop yesterday while the other two nursed "shinsplints."

John Motzenbecker, Mort Alnwick, Charley Neumeyer and Vincent Braun comprised the working quartet and Vincent Healey, team captain, and Al Frey, the invalids.

"Shinsplints," explained Coach H. V. Mulligan, is a common ailment among trackmen and it develops fro mpounding the boards. Mulligan, a local jeweler who coaches track for the love of the sport, said final tryouts will be held Wednesday afternoon. On the same day candidates for the freshman squad will vie for positions.

Thousands Cheer Seabiscuit Workout

The 'Biscuit, with Jockey Gordon Helton in the saddle, galloped the distance in 1 minute flat as thousands cheered his unofficial appearance on the strip.

Swift Claims 'Rabbit' Ball Wrecks Arms

Pirate Pitcher Is Latest to Denounce Lively Sphere

Lakeland, Fla., Jan. 27.—Bill Swift, of the Pirates, joined today the ever-growing staff of sore arms diagnosticians which threatens to exceed in number the pitchers with sore arms.

Swift, who has escaped arm trouble himself, blames the lively ball which makes it necessary for a pitcher to "bear down on every throw."

"With the lively ball, one pitch can lose a ball game, and every hurler knows it," he said.

"Consequently there isn't a minute you can let up, and you bear down on every throw. Lots of arms can't take the punishment and that's just what causes all these complaints today."

Swift, who is spending most of his winter vacation golfing here, found the old ball much more to his and other pitchers' liking.

"Not only was the ball dead to start with," he said, "but pretty soon the cover got rough and the pitcher could do all sorts of tricks with it. If only three or four balls were used in a game today there would be a lot fewer cheap home runs."

Swift won seven and lost five for Pittsburgh last year, but worked altogether in 36 games, including relief duty. He said he had no explanation and no excuse for the collapse of the Pirate crew near the finish line last season.

Consequently, he observed, he'd be "foolish" to try to pick the winner of the 1939 Notional League pennant, but saw no changes of sufficient importance to upset the balance to any extent.

Seabiscuit Is Entered for $10,000 Race

Handicap Champion Doubtful Starter; 20 Listed in Test Today

Los Angeles, Jan. 27.—Headed by "in-again-out-again" Seabiscuit, 20 candidates were named today to start in the $10,000 San Felipe Handicap at Santa Anita Park tomorrow, but whether the redoubtable 'Biscuit actually would go to the post for his 1939 debut remained problematical.

Ten minutes after Seabiscuit's name came through the entry box, Owner Charles S. Howard declared it was "highly improbable" that his stake champion would race tomorrow.

Obviously playing a figurative game of checkers with owners of the other horses entered in the race, among them Marica, Sun Egret, Specify and Speed to Spare, Howard said his stable wanted to find out just how many really intended going into the event before making a final decision on his own horse.

Position Not Favorable

He said the No. 9 post position drawn by Seabiscuit was not to his liking because it was the middle of the large field, but earlier in the week his trainer, Tom Smith, said a rail position would be unfavorable to Seabiscuit's chances.

Twenty-seven horses were nominated for the six-furlong race last week, and Smith promptly announced that was too many—Seabiscuit would not be entered. He declared that while Seabiscuit must have a race soon to get in shape for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap March 4, conditions must be right for his chief contender.

Jockey Charlie Rosengarten was named as Seabiscuit's rider. Rosengarten has been away from the track for sometime, due to overweight, but recently went back into training.

Blair Girls Beat Mt. Rainier, 13-12

The Blair High School girls basketball team won its third straight game yesterday, rallying briskly in the second half to defeat Mount Rainier, 13-12, on the Blair floor.

Trailing 6-0 at halftime, Blair behind the shooting of Dot Travis and Ellis Barnard came back to tie the count at 6-6 at the end of the third quaretr and then win after a see-saw final quarter.

Mac Mitchell, hailed as a coming champion in the mile, will face over the ten-lap route Archie San Romani, the Lansas miler who has done 4:07.2; Phil Graves of the N. Y. A. C. and recent conqueror of San Romani and Howie Brock, intercollegiate outdoor mile record holder.

Hoyas Five Leaves On 3-Game Road Trip

Georgetown University's once-beaten basketball team left last night on a three-game road trip against strong New York opponents.

The Hoyas, who are lodged in second place in the fast Eastern Basketball Conference, open their invasion against Syracuse today, rest on Sunday, then meet Fordham Monday and Army Tuesday.

Georgetown met and lost to each team on a similar trip last season, but expects to reap revenge on at least two of the enemies this time. Even a clean sweep for Elmer Ripley's Georgetown five would not be surprising.

Blair Bows To Bethesda In Overtime

21-19 Battle Is Decided On Two Foul Shots as Capacity Crowd Watches

In a thrilling over-time battle, Bethesda-Chevy Chase's court representatives turned by the tossers of Blair High last night by a margin of 21 to 19. One of the largest crowds ever to witness basketball in the Blair Gymnasium saw the action. A pair of foul shots decided the issue after the rivals had finished regulation with the count at 19-all.

Under the new "sudden death" rule, giving victory to the first team scoring two consecutive points, Kinsman and Shumate, Bethesda's guards, dropped in the single points that gave their team the victory.

The battle was a nip and tuck affair from the opening whistle, with the rivals deadlocked at 11 points, at the end of the first half. The victory was a much coveted one for Bethesda over an old rival. Blair had gained the spotlight earlier in the week with a victory that stopped the winning streak of Mount Rainier High.

Bethesda and Blair will clash again in late February.

Woodberry Wins; 41 Fouls Are Called

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodberry Forest, Va., Jan. 27.—Woodberry Forest defeated Fishburne Military School here today, 56-26, in a wild game in which a total of 41 fouls was called. The home team collected 18 points on charity throws, while the Cadets made 10.

With Covington heading the way, Woodberry regulars jumped into 21-1 lead in the first period and then retired in favor of the seconds, who were outscored by the visitors, 9-6, in the next period. With the home forces gradually increasing their lead, the second half proved a repetition of the first.

Covington of Woodberry paced the scores with 16 points, while Capt. Winne and Menges lead the Cadets with 6 points each.

Varied Sports Program at Navy Today

Basketeers Meet Penn State; Fencers, Wrestlers Busy

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 27.—Naval Academy swordsmen, wrestlers and basketball players go into action tomorrow in a varied sports day.

The fast-coming basketball team, sparked by the return of "Jeep" Gillette, veteran forward, to the team, tangles with the Penn State Nittany Lions.

Navy started feebly against Gettysburg College, won from Maryland, dropped another to Duke, and then suddenly came to life to knock off North Carolina and Pennsylvania.

"The Jeep" engineered a 12-point rally that brought the Navy from behind to overhaul the North Carolinians Saturday. Working with Capt. Bob Laney, forward, and George Ghesquiere, center, Gillette gives Coach Johnny Wilson a veteran forward line of ace shotmakers.

Norman Wilson, the rookie "find" who directs the floor play, and Mike Hanley, veteran defensive star, will probably team at the guards.

The fencers open their season against the strong Saltus Fencing Club of New York.

The swordsmen are an unknown quantity this year. Six members of the strong '38 aggregation graduated, including the entire Epee squad.

Vince dePoix, captain and foilsman; Jim Dare, Lee Snilsberg and Abe Campo, sabremen, are the veterans who will cross words with the Saltus team.

Jim McPherson, Phil Glennon, Epee wielders, and Dan Appleton, foilsman, will probably start tomorrow in addition to the veterans.

The wrestlers will match holds with the University of North Carolina Tarheel grapplers. The Navy wrestling team took a 17-9 decision from Virginia Military Institute. Navy won a fall and four decisions to three decisions for the Southerners.

Virginians' Horse Show Set at Camden

Old Dominion Sports-Men Named Among Officials for Event

Camden, S. C., Jan. 27.—The Virginians Horse Show, to be held at the J. North Fletcher stables in Camden on February 18, is the first show of any real importance on the 1939 circuit.

The Virginians show was started five years ago and has grown during that period from a small post-entry affair of six classes into a fixture licensed by the American Horse Show Association. In spite of the fact that the show has developed into an event of national significance and that last year there were more than 120 individual horses representing owners from 15 States, it still has a friendly and informal atmosphere about it.

On the committee in charge of the 1939 show are J. North Fletcher, secretary, of Warrenton, Va.; Wilhelmine S. Kirby, Bedford Hills, N. Y.; Harry D. Kirkover, Buffalo, N. Y.; Viola Winmill Duffey and Randolph G. Duffey, of Warrenton, and Richard B. Boykin and Charles DuBose, jr., of Camden.

The show, which is free to the public, will be judged by Henry L. Bell, of Bayside, Long Island, and Christopher M. Greer, of Upperville, Va., who will be remembered for their fine work in connection with the national shows in this country and Canada.

Gallaudet Wrestlers Face Y. M. C. A. Tonight

Seeking revenge for an early season defeat Gallaudet will throw a strong, well-balanced wrestling squad against a visiting Y. M. C. A. team tonight at 8 o'clock. In their previous meeting the "Y" won, 21-11.

There will be one newcomer in the Blues lineup, Engelgeau filling the place in the 175-pound class made vacant by Jorde, who left school. Also scheduled to appear for Gallaudet are Hess, Sullivan, Rafferty, Bowen, Ashe and Ohlson.

G. W. Battles Strong W.-L. Five Tonight

Colonials Hope to Boost Road Average; Generals Favored in Lexington Game

By Jack Munhall.

George Washington's touring basketball forces conclude their three-day trip tonight, meeting Washington and Lee at Lexington, Va., in one of the feature games on the Generals' schedule. The Colonials, beaten by Army and winner over Colgate, need a victory to show a winning percentage for their road swing and a better than .500 mark for their season's efforts.

Unusual interest is being attached to this game by W. & L. fans not only because it marks the beginning of athletic relations between the schools but also because the Colonials loom as a distinct threat to the Generals' unspoiled home record.

The Generals, a Southern Conference power, have been only a fair team on the road but at home unbeatable. In their last four games they have scored 256 points for an average of 64 points a game. While bowling over Bridgewater, Lynchburg, William and Mary and Virginia Tech, the Generals have been extended only by National Business College, State A. A. U. champions, which seriously threatened before bowing, 38-34.

Secret of Success

The secert of the Generals' remarkable success at home is said to lie in their adaptibility to the home floor, which is highly helpful to a team reyling on speed and footwork. The current W. and L. squad is one of the fastest ever coached by Cy Young, and also depends largely on pivoting and split-second plays for its offense.

For that reason and also because the Colonials go to Lexington after two straight gruelling battles, the Generals will rule slight favorites.

An interesting sidelight on the game is the impending individual duel between G. W.'s captain and hight-scoring forward, Bob Faris, and W. and L.'s colorful sophomore star, Dick Pinck, who is pacing the State pointmakers.

The Washington and Lee game marks the Colonials' second invasion of the Lexington area and also their third meeting with a school from that section. They dropped a hard-fought game to Roanoke at Salem and were beaten by the Maroons in a return game here.

The proceeds of Monday night's basketball game between Catholic University and Loyola, of Baltimore, will be turned over to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, A. J. Bergman, athletic director at Catholic University, announced yesterday.

Movie Stars Invited

Arrangements also are being made for the personal appearance of several Hollywood stars, who will be here for the Birthday Ball dances Monday night, if they can find time in their busy schedule. Among those invited to attend are Lionel Stander, who is appearing on a local stage this week; Roscoe Ates, George Brent, Jean Parker, Luise Rainer, Eleanor Powell and Errol Flynn.

Nelson Bell, chairman of the welcoming committee for the stars, has promised he will do his best to have at least one of the celebrities on hand for the game at Brookland.

The possibility of seeing a favorite movie star in person, however, is not the only attraction of this game, for Loyola will bring to town an exceptionally strong team, and one which holds an early season victory over the Cards. The Baltimore five handed Fod Cotton's crew a 37-34 setback in their season's debut at Baltimore.

This benefit game will be the third in which Catholic University has participated for the Infantile Paralysis fund.

Highomar, $5.50 Favorite, Wins in Hialeah Photo Finish

Third Victory This Winter For Gelding

Nash Gets Him Up In Final Strides to Score; Meade Held To Single Triumph

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 27.—Mrs. B. F. Whitaker's popular blue and white silks were borne to a hard earned victory by the consistent Highomar in the 7 furlongs of the Clearwater Purse here this afternoon. It was a big thrill to a majority of the chilled crowd when the 6-year-old gelding, ridden by Ronnie Nash, barely got up in time to poke the tip of his nose in front of Cosport in the photo duel. Our Willie, very lightly backed, was beaten a length and a half for the place.

Highomar now has won three races and finished second once in four winter efforts. Under a mere 101 pounds, the chestnut son of High Cloud stepped home in 1:23 4-5, to pay the talent $5.50 for $2. Nine members of the older division faced the starter.

Some Anxious Moments

Backers of Highomar had some anxious moments before their selection finally got down in front. Little Shaver and Co-sport drew far clear of the field in the first quarter-mile while Highomar was racing along in fourth position. Little Shaver faltered badly before turning for home, and Highomar drove into second place. He was still several lengths behind Cosport entering the stretch, but under Nash's desperate urging the old fellow answered the question in game fashion. Our Willie made up considerable ground.

E. J. Regan's Addis, a son of Nocturnal, snapped out of the dull form he displayed in his last start and won the opening contest in a common gallop.

There was a marked similarity to the running of the first two races. Ruperto Donoso guided both winners to four-length triumphs and Don Meade finished sixth on the two favorites, both running third in the early stages and then dropping back.

Donoso had the leg up on the $9 for $2 shot Sanderstown in the second, thus accounting for both ends of a $39.20 daily double.

The fourth dash saw Don Meade entering the winner's circle aboard the $6.50 for $2 choice—Faust—which clicked by a length and a half. Donna Leona was second by a half length, with Cruising third. Faust was last away in the field of seven. Meade improved his mount's position at each pole, and, driving the veteran through on the inside in the stretch, won going away. Donna Leona, failing to display her usual early speed, finished gamely to overtake Cruising.

Longshots in Limelight

Long-shot players had plenty of opportunity to get in a big inning when two outsiders decided the issue in the fifth race. Radio Gold, paying $59, took the purse by three lengths from Exhilaration. There was plenty of exhilaration for those who backed that colt for place, a $2 ticket being good for $108.90. Harp Weaver lost the place by a head.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Saunderstown, a $9 shot, gallops home ahead of Brain Trust (No. 2) and Candy Hero (No. 5) in yesterday's second race at Florida. The victory allowed Donoso, a South American youth, to ride both ends of a $39.20 daily double. He had scored in the previous race with Addis at $8

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 27 (AP).—Ben Jones, who saddled Herbert M. Woolf's Lawrin for his winning race in the 1938 Kentucky Derby, won the trainers' prize for the first 15-day period that ended here today. The Missouri conditioner, winner of all three periods last year, finished with 39 points, while Jack Howard was second with 32 points and Hirsch Jacobs third with 31. Jones and Howard each had seven winners, but the former had more seconds and thirds. Points are computed on a basis of four for a winner, two for a second and one for a third. Jones received a $350 prize, Howard $100 and Jacobs $50.

Hialeah Park, Jan. 27.

Dear Al,

If you have only 50 cents, and you're in Louisville on May 6, and you want to see the sixty-fifth running of the Kentucky Derby, you're okay. And after you get into Churchill Downs, and you feel that you wish to risk only $1 on your choice, instead of the usual $2, you're still okay. Col. Matt J. Winn, who lofted the Kentucky Derby from just another horse race to America's illustrious classic, said, while announcing plans for the newer derby on May 6: "In these later years, with the derby a consistent sell-out, and every inch of space in the grandstand and clubhouse section taken by the patrons willing to pay the regular admission fee of $2.35 my great problem was to try to provide some place for the people of Louisville who wanted to see the race, but could not pay the general admission. I tried letting them into the infield—gratis—but there was abuse here. Too many folks jumped the fences and entered the grandstand and clubhouse sections, adding to the confusion there. But this year the problem will be solved—I hope. I have set aside a space on the Central avenue side, just to the right of the starting chute for the derby, looking at it from the grandstand. This space will accommodate at least 20,000 persons who will have a fine view of the start of the race, a view of the duel on the backstretch and also of the horses turning for the finish wire. This space is about 4 feet higher than the other end of the track because the other end was depressed that much two years ago by the floods. This gives them 4 feet clearance in view, but I will add another five to that. This, then gives them a height of 9 feet from which to look down at the finish line. The section will be terraced. I imagine there will be about nine rows o. terraces, each about 10 inches high, with a space of about 4 feet between. The admission to this section will be 50 cents. I will have $1 betting booths installed for the benefit of those who cannot afford to make the $2 wager, yet feel an irresistible impulse to back their choice with a modest wager. There will be numerous refreshment booths there, with all other comforts to be found in the grandstand, and food in this section will be just exactly one-half of what it is in the garndstand. I feel happy over being able to make such an arrangement because I know that in Louisville, and also in surrounding places, there have been many people who have been wildly eager to see a derby, yet never have been able to afford it. The 50 cent admission fee should be within their means."

Clocker Mike showed a profit of $13.25 today. He lost his $10 win money on Continuity but the mare came in second and Mike collected $38.25 for his $15 to place. This makes the bankroll stand at $346.55. Tomorrow Mike will wager $10 to win on Sickle T. and $10 to win on Kievex.

BILL.

First race — Lady Genie, with Meade in the saddle, needs only to repeat that last good effort to get home in front of these. I see no reason for mistakes. What A Pal has closing ability and should be in the thick of stretch contention. Maneuver is coming along and may be a keen factor.

Second race—Nipponese turned in a fair race last out and gets in light for this distance affair. Seems as good as anything in a rather open race. Town Car was scratched yesterday to await this and should go well. Gold Cross is a possibility.

Third race—Legenda is better suited in this than in the feature and if she goes here I'm going to string along. Ghost Queen can better that last and looms as a keen factor. **

New Crop Cotton Futures Gain 9 to 11 Points

New York, Jan. 27 (AP).—Cotton was lifted partly out of the doldrums today by a moderate buying movement in new crop positions. October, December and January closed 9 to 11 points higher and the near positions ended at gains of 2 to 3 points.

Improvement in the tone of securities markets after several days of weakness because of the unsettled European situation, bolstered cotton sentiment.

It was also reported bidding for distant months was based in part on a theory that any move to change the Federal farm program vitally would be held up until it was possible to gain some idea of the 1939-40 cotton crop acreage.

Prices Turn Upward After Week's Decline Best Gains and Most Activity Near Close Steel Shares Make Sharpest Recovery

New York, Jan. 28.—Pressure on security markets relaxed noticeably today and as a result the trend was higher for the first time in a week. There was nothing much to account for the change in direction except what brokers are pleased to call an oversold condition. Foreign news was as bad or worse than on Thursday except for totalitarian readers. The sole item of domestic news which could account for a rally—a reverse of Roosevelt on relief—came half an hour after the close.

Disregarding irregularity in London and disturbing rumors of Hitleran ambitions, to be disclosed presumably in the Nazi leader's speech on Monday, stock prices edged upward from the opening, kept improving bit by bit and accelerated their rise in the last hour. It was at this final stage of trading that a good part of the day's volume came out although total turnover was approximately two-thirds of that on the previous day. Last prices indicated a recovery of the list as a whole amounting to considerably more than half losses sustained in Thursday's break.

Steel shares showed the sharpest recovery with blue-clip manufacturing issues well up and good gains on small turnover by coppers, motors, rail equipments and stores. Advances in power, railroad and oil shares were general but less definite. Chart readers noted that the composite for the 100 stocks at their high for the day almost exactly equaled the high of the preceding session. This led, of course, to speculation regarding theoretical resistance levels.

Bethlehem Gains 3

Bethlehem Steel was one of the best performers in its division, rising more than 3 points, and this could scarcely be attributed to jubilance over the fourth-quarter report and observations on the steel business by E. G. Grace, president, made available after Thursday's close. Contrary to some Wall Street expectations, Bethlehem failed to cover preferred dividend requirements in 1938 and Mr. Grace announced current operations of 51 per cent are not supported by a 45 per cent rate of incoming orders. In addition, the steel chief placed emphasis on difficulties the industry will face in doing business under basic wage minimums promulgated by the Department of Labor. Steel common, second most active stock, firmed 1¾.

Reports on automobile assemblies emphasized the higher rate of output compared with a year ago rather than the slight decline from the preceding week. In this connection, financial commentators pointed out that it is still too early to determine how much, if any, damage has been done to the domestic business structure by the recent weakness in security markets as well as aggravation of foreign uncertainties. It would only be natural to expect some hesitancy. One primary concern, a leading analyst emphasizes, is the indefinite movements of commodity prices. It is also suggested that measures taken by the British authorities to strengthen the pound may have had as much to do with foreign liquidation in the New York market as the European war scare.

Marks Strong

Foreign exchange dealings today witnessed loss of more ground by the guilder which flirted with the low it established during the Munich crisis. German Reichmarks were unaccountably strong, gaining 15 points, but benevolent and travel-marks lost a little more. Rumors from the other side were scary. One was to the effect that Germany and Italy would seek large indemnity or other concessions in return for aid to Franco; another that Hitler, in his speech Monday, will not only demand return of all German colonies lost in the war, but repayment to the Reich of all World War indemnities.

Bond Market Fairly Firm

Listed bonds moved irregularly today, as selling pressure diminished and finally was replaced by modest inquiry for both investment and speculative securities. Medium-priced carrier bonds rallied more readily than other classes, with net gains ranging to 2 points in the favored groups. United States Treasury bonds held around previous figures, while best rated corporates improved. Foreign dollar issues continued to reflect great unsettlement. Turnover was $5,290,000, which is half a normal day's business.

Railroad bonds that lately were under greatest pressure responded most readily to the small buying orders that appeared. New York Central, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway and similar bonds moved up fractions to 2 points. Some inactive rails were marked down sharply on first sales in some days, but these movements merely reflected variations of earlier dealings. Borderline rails improved slightly, along with default issues. Local tractions, communications bonds, holding company and other special groups likewise did better.

Long term United States Treasury bonds showed only smallest fractional variations in either direction, save where inactive bonds made up at around the changes of recent days. Guaranteed issues were dull. Telephone and United States Steel debentures improved fractionally, and other high grade corporate bonds likewise were better.

J., a member of the technical staff of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, received the 1938 Lawrence Sperry Award for development of a terrain clearance indicator for airplanes.

All-Time Record For Safety Set By General Motors

New York, Jan. 27.—General Motors Corporation today reported a new all-time industrial safety record in 1938 for its 86 plants in the United States and Canada. For every 1,000,000 man hours of work last year there were only 4.91 lost-time accidents, compared to 5.15 lost-time accidents in 1937 and 5.10 in 1936.

The severity of accidents, representing time off due to mishaps in the plants, was likewise reduced during 1938 to a point where there were only 0.595 days lost to employes for every 1,000 hours worked. This compares with 0.652 in 1937 and 0.664 in 1936.

Seven General Motors plants had no lost-time accidents during the entire year, and two of these, the Packard Electric and Sunlight Electrical plants of Warren, Ohio, completed their second year of a perfect record without a lost-time accident.

On the basis of records of the National Safety Council, an employe of General Motors is safer at his job in a plant than he is at home or going to and from work.

Tin Consumption Drops 24% in Year

New York, Jan. 27 (AP).—World apparent consumption of tin during 1938 was estimated at 152,000 tons, a drop of 24 per cent from 1937, according to a report issued today by the International Tin Research and Development Council.

World production in 1938 was placed at 148,600 tons, against 208,300 in 1937.

Plan to Avert Slump in 1940 Asked by A.F.L.

Sees Danger Ahead Urges National Board Optimistic for 1939

By the Associated Press.

The American Federation of Labor's Monthly Survey of Business suggested yesterday that some means of national planning for industry be set up to forestall another depression in 1940.

"A very real danger lies ahead for 1940," the publication said. "By 1940 the present wave of Government spending will have largely exhausted its stimulating effect on business, and unless plans are devised to set private industry to work producing goods and raising living standards, we shall either face another depression or a greater armament program to put men to work.

"Excessive armaments lower living standards and increase danger of war. Also, Government cannot forever go on piling deficit on deficit.

Seeks Business Spur

"In this critical outlook, which literally may be a matter of life or death to all of us, the first step is to establish a national planning board of representatives from business, labor, agriculture, consumers, Government, with provisions for experts to assist them and a mandate to stimulate the production of goods by private industry."

The survey presented an optimistic picture of the outlook for 1939, barring war. "Inventories have been sold off, workers' buying power is rising, there is no inflation of credit, and prices have held almost without change since mid-November," it said.

"Government spending has been running at very high rates and will continue in the first half of 1939. In addition to railroad building, utilities must now plan new construction to meet record demands for power; residential as well as heavy construction is increasing; contracts for the four weeks ending January 7 being more than double last year's.

"Observers seem unanimous in the belief that, barring war, recovery will soon be resumed."

Dutch Guilder Falls Further in Selling

New York, Jan. 27 (AP).—The Netherlands guilder suffered another sinking spell in today's foreign exchange dealings. Under selling that banking houses said largely came from abroad, the Dutch currency dropped 0.16 of a cent, to 53.73, in terms of the dollar in one of the widest breaks in a week-long selling drive. Money experts were of the opinion the selling represented withdrawal of foreign capital from Holland and not a flight of Dutch-owned money. The British pound closed unchanged, while the French franc dipped 3-16 of a cent. The Federal Reserve Bank reported $4,680,000 in gold was engaged in England and $2,455,000 in Holland for shipment here.

Splawn Admits Rail Bill Would Abolish Jobs

Says Problem Confronts Legislators; Calls Measure an Aid

By the Associated Press.

W. M. W. Splawn, Interstate Commerce Commissioner, said yesterday the Lea transportation bill would cause some railroad employes to lose their jobs, but he termed the legislation a general aid to railroad companies.

Referring to a section of the bill providing for retirement of employes growing out of consolidations, mergers or pooling operations, Splawn told the House Interstate Commerce Committee:

"It would have the effect of destroying existing jobs. That's a problem that will confront you. Assuming justice can be done, this will result in stronger properties and stronger companies—companies that can pay good rates consistently and at the same time give the public good service at just rates."

Demand Rate Equality

Meanwhile, Southern Senators were assured that a public hearing would be held on proposals which the Senators declared, would establish national equality in railroad freight rates.

Senator Hill (Democrat), Alabama, became chairman of an Interstate Commerce sub-committee to hear testimony. To serve with him were named Senators Andrews (Democrat), Florida; Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota; Gurney (Republican), South Dakota, and Tobey (Republican), New Hampshire.

In the House, a West-South bloc voted to demand that rate equalization be written into the Administration's general railroad legislation. Members complained Northeastern States had preferential rates at the expense of the South, Southwest, Midwest and West.

Wheat Prices Edge Higher In Dull Day

Eyes Are on Europe Mills Are Buyers Corn Prices Yield

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—Wheat finished a fraction higher today at the end of dull session. The shout of traders in the pit was reduced to a murmur much of the day. Brokers idled on the steps awaiting orders but business was scarce. They blamed the doldrums largely on trade hesitancy throughout the world pending clarification of the muddled European political situation.

Speeches of Hitler on Monday and Daladier on Tuesday were awaited anxiously in the grain trade. Prior to their deliverance, grain men, including exporters, importers, millers, shippers, investors and speculators observed caution.

Support came to wheat through purchasing of cash grain credited to milling interests and the Government export subsidy agency. It was assumed hedges on wheat sold to the Government were lifted at times to give the market support. Strength insecurities and a slightly higher Liverpool market also helped.

Wheat showed maximum gains of ½ cent at times and was never more than ¼ below yesterday's finish, closing unchanged to ¼ higher. May, 69¾@69⅝; July, 69¾. Corn was ⅝ lower to ¼ higher; May, 51¼@51⅜; July, 52⅜@52½. Oats, ¼ off to ⅛ up; Rye, ⅛@¼ higher; Lard, 2 lower to 5 higher.

Atom Breaking Revealed to Scientists Here

German Tells of Splitting Uranium Into 'Element 93' and Barium

Reports of an atom smashing feat, which if true may open almost inexhaustible sources of energy, were revealed yesterday at the fifth annual conference on Theoretical Physics here.

Papers from Dr. G. Hahn of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute in Berlin, revealed how he had broken uranium atoms into a new form, "element 93," and barium, and then split these into two other elements of about half the weight of uranium.

Scientists at the conference said if such a transformation took place 200,000,000 electron volts of energy would automatically be released from each broken atom.

Niels Bohr Attends

"Element 93" never really exists at all—that is, hardly ever, they said. It breaks down into the two lighter elements in ten to the minus twentieth part of a second.

The conference, sponsored by the Carnegie Institution and George Washington University, includes world-renowned scientists, among them Niels Bohr, director of the University Institute for Theoretical Physics in Copenhagen, creator of the quantum theory of atomic structure.

Also considered yesterday was the behavior of super cooled liquid helium or "helium II". Helium II is the only liquid which cannot be solidified by cooling.

Defies Laws of Gravity

Discovered about two years ago, it was observed that if a tube was inserted into a container of liquid helium and the top of the tube heated, a fountain of the helium would spurt into the air, seemingly defying gravity.

If an empty tumbler were inserted into the liquid, bottom down, the top several inches above the surface, immediately the liquid would flow up the side of the glass and down into the interior until it reached a level corresponding to the level in the container.

The scientists want to know if these phenomena be accounted for in the light of known laws and theories, but have arrived at no conclusion.

Wilson High Class, U. F. W. A. Unit, to Hear Dr. Freeman

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will preach before a congregation including delegations from the United Federal Workers of America and the graduating class of Woodrow Wilson High School at the 4 p. m. service in the cathedral tomorrow.

At morning prayer in the cathedral, the Rev. William M. Bradner, canon precentor, will preach. Holy Communion will be celebrated in the Bethlehem chapel at 7:30 and 9:30 a. m.

Cathedral Organist Robert L. Barrows will give the second in a series of organ recitals after the 4 p. m. service, with Edwin Steffe, barytone, as assisting soloist.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

In today's hand a chronic reopener was caught and punished. South, a crafty rubber bridge player, blandly passed his partner's opening bid when he might have made a response because he had a "hunch" there was no game and because his length in hearts encouraged him to look for favors from West, who knew a little, but not too much, about part scores.

West knew about defending part scores, but he had not yet learned that at rubber bridge, and particularly when vulnerable, it is often wise to let well enough alone. You might call him a smart player, but he was still "green" enough to be a dupe for South.

The bidding is self-explanatory. East tried to bail his partner out with a rescue of three diamonds, but the set was just as costly. The pair was defeated three tricks for a loss of 800 points, which was worth more than a slam to the adversaries. The worst of it was that the stinging set was taken for nothing. If West had passed, his adversaries would have made a few points for the part score.

The defense was strong; North and South milked every trick there was from the hand. South won the king and queen of spades and shifted to the ten of clubs. Three club tricks and the ace of spades were taken, then North led the spade jack to insure making his trump queen.

East threw off his heart and ruffed the spade with the diamond nine, but after cashing the diamond ace and entering his hand by trumping a heart and taking the diamond king he had to give up a trump trick to North. East was set three tricks, losing three spades, three clubs and a diamond.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

NOTHING official will come from the mysterious conference, held Thursday by the President and the Civil Service Commission, until Monday, the President indicated at his press conference yesterday. The chances are that on Monday he will issue an order outlining exemptions under the June 24 order that would bring some 81,000 previously exempt Federal employes into civil service status. Federal attorneys, or a big bloc of them, have been the principal criers for exemption. Chances—as these appear at this writing—are that few will get exemption.

INTO the personnel harassments at Gallinger Hospital has crept the large-sized bugaboo of layoffs. Insufficient funds is given as the reason for this. The Bureau of the Budget has made recommendations for a 44-hour week and increased personnel for the hospital. This is not effective, however, until July 1, next. The United Federal Workers of America are urging that a deficiency appropriation be prepared by Congress to relieve the conditions in the interim. The chief sore sports at Gallinger are in the laboratory, kitchen and laundry, where understaffing is acute. There, understaffing can cause bad conditions that are felt from one end of the institution to the other.

FCC problem among problems: To find a frequency to accommodate television. The engineering staff is giving major time to it, and a commission spokesman says it is a very technical matter, what with the ether so full of frequencies. "It's something like trying to get more than a gallon of water in a gallon jug," he said, adding that television, in perfection, is still farther away than around the corner.

Frank U. Whitted, of 1753 Eighth street northwest, was born January 1, 1840, and is the second oldest person on the retirement rolls of the Civil Service Commission—which now holds more than 56,000 names. Whitted was born in North Carolina, worked at the Treasury and GPO, retired from the service in 1922 and attributes his long life to regular habits, good food and plenty of sleep. Mark Thrash, of Georgia, who is 118 years old, the oldest person on the retirement lists, has not given the public the recipe of how he did it.

AN Alaskan taxpayer and sovereign citizen writes the Government in hopes of straightening out the social security aspects of his life. Informally, you may try to help the Government straighten his case out:

"A is using my team to haul wood for himself, in exchange for the use of the team he drives them to haul wood for me. Do I have to pay social security on his work? B is cutting wood for his own use, then in exchange for me delivering his wood he cuts an equal amount for me. Do I have to pay S. S. on him? I, of course, expect to report and pay S. S. on wood I may buy outside of this mentioned exchange."

VETERANS' representatives called on the Civil Service Commission the other day to talk things over. They were told that there has been no change whatever in the commission's long-established views on veteran preference, that the rights and privileges of veterans remain unchanged. And one of the inner clauses of the June 24 Executive Order was hauled out to fasten down the policy. There it is provided that an appointing officer who passes over an eligible veteran must file with the C. S. C. a written statement setting forth in detail the reasons for so doing.

RETIREMENT comes at the close of this month to William Hunter Haycock, assistant postmaster of Washington, and universally esteemed during his 52 years of service to the Government. Mr. Haycock, principal assistant to Postmaster Vincent Burke, was born in Georgetown, and upon his retirement will be honored by his associates at a banquet at 7 o'clock this evening, in the Mayflower Hotel.

Bob Burns Says—

An' now the telephone company comes out with a mechanical contraption they're puttin' on display at the World's Fair that does your talkin' for you. Pretty soon somebody'll be inventin' a mechanical gadget that'll do your eatin' for you. An' they'll have a mechanical stomach to digest the food, so all you'll have to do is sit by an' sniff an' smack your lips. They already got machines to make your lungs operate without your drawin' a breath! Now they're tryin' to grow babies in incubators like we do chicks. They've had addin' machines for a long time that work faster'n the human mind. An' you can go into health institutes today an' get jounced up an' down by a mechanical horse that makes you just as sore as a ride on a real horse through the park.

Science is sure marvelous, but Grandpa Snazzy says if it keeps on at the rate it's goin' it won't be long till it completely dehumanizes the human bein'. But there's one thing I don't guess a machine'll ever be able to do for us—much to my regret—an' that's pay our bills!

Bedtime Story

A Little Teamwork

By Thornton W. Burgess.

One reason that Reddy Fox is so successful in keeping out of serious trouble and in managing to keep on living despite hunters with their Dogs and terrible guns, and trappers, with their hidden steel traps with dreadful jaws, is because he is only one-half of a team. Mrs. Reddy is the other half.

There is an old saying that "two heads are better than one," and it is true when the two heads understand each other so perfectly as those of Reddy and Mrs. Reddy. They have lived a long time in the Old Pasture on Farmer Brown's farm. They have had many a long, hard run ahead of Dogs, and in the end have fooled them. They have had many narrow escapes from hunters and from trappers, and after each such escape they have been a little wiser than before.

If an extra smart Dog chased Reddy and Reddy used his best tricks in vain, all he did was to signal Mrs. Reddy, and she would slip into his place and Reddy would rest and plan some new trick. When he was rested he would relieve Mrs. Reddy. Meanwhile, the Dog would have no rest. It was an old trick, but never was it more successfully performed than by Reddy and Mrs. Reddy. Their team work was perfect.

Having discovered that traps were being set for them around the farmyard, where Reddy had caught two hens, they promptly decided that they would hunt elsewhere for a while. Even such a good dinner as a fat hen would make wasn't worth the risk of stepping into one of those dreadful traps.

Now there was one other farm where the Hens were not kept shut up during the day, but there was a Dog at that place. Reddy and Mrs. Reddy had kept away from those Hens.

It would be time enough to try for some of those Hens when they could get nothing elsewhere. The time had come. The traps that had been set for them decided the matter. They would move on, but before going they would have at least one more good meal, one more chicken dinner.

It was quite simple. Together they reached a hiding place from which they could watch that dooryard. They saw the Hens eating their breakfast in the henyard. They saw the farmer leave the yard gate open when he went back to the house. They saw the Dog on the doorstep yawn and stretch, and then sit down there.

Reddy looked at Mrs. Reddy. She grinned and settled herself comfortably to watch. Reddy grinned back at her and trotted over toward that dooryard. He approached it from back of the barn. He boldly walked around the corner in plain sight of the Dog.

Reddy settled himself to running. He led that Dog almost out of hearing. Mrs. Reddy watched the farmhouse and yard. She saw a Man come out and look in the direction of the chase. Then he went back in the house. A few minutes later he came out again, and this time he had a terrible gun. He listened to the sounds of the chase. Then he set off hurriedly across the fields. He was planning to head Reddy off, for he thought he knew just where Reddy would travel.

Mrs. Reddy waited a few minutes longer. Then she got to her feet and made for that dooryard. Watching her chance, she dashed in among the Hens, and before the frightened big birds really knew what was happening she had killed two. One she hid down back of the barn. The other she carried to a certain knoll and hid. Then she returned for the other.

The Washington Post Bureau. 207 Prince St., Alexandria, Va. Phone TEmple 3767. Delivery Service, Phone Alex. 1400.

David E. Bayliss, of Alexandria, was the low bidder on the proposed remodeling of the City Hall and City Jail, with an offer of $31,325 for the job. This was accepted by the city council Thursday night. City Manager Carl L. Budwesky reported other bids were W. W. Burroughs, $33,168; Northern Virginia Construction Co., $32,480; E. A. The city manager explained that the low bid for the work is $1,325 above the allocation set up by the PWA, the difference to be made up by the city. A grant of 45 per cent of $30,000 will be made for the work, therefore the city will receive a total of $13,500 from the Federal Government and the cost to the city will be $17,825.

West Maryland Reported Cool To Sewage Plan

Creation of Sanitary District Disfavored Because of Cost

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 27.—Action on a State health department recommendation that a general sanitary district be set up for unincorporated towns near here was left up to the board of county commissioners today, and at least one member indicated disapproval.

Simeon W. Green, president of the county commissioners, said "delegation after delegation" has appeared before the board opposing the recommendation.

Dr. W. T. Riley, director of the State health department, asked for a conference with the Allegany County commissioners to discuss the project.

The health department recommended the sanitary districts several weeks ago after reporting that sanitary conditions on Georges Creek and between Cumberland and Cresaptown are bad because unincorporated towns dump sewage into the district's streams.

The condition, the department said, endangered the water supplies of several urban districts in this vicinity.

A suggestion was made that the Allegany County delegation in the Legislature pass a statute which would permit creation of a sanitary district, but State Senator Robert M. Kimble declared:

"I am not going to introduce the bill, nor will I support it if it is introduced, unless the county commissioners indorse it."

He added that he appreciated "the need for a better water supply and more adequate sewerage in many parts of the county, but that he was "not sure that the people could stand the additional taxation involved."

Senator Ward criticized increased labor costs at the dispensary and "inadequacies in the bookkeeping system" in his statement.

Va. Hospital Head Complains of Lack Of Regular Audits

Richmond, Va., Jan. 27 (AP).—The State hospital board heard from a superintendent today a complaint that the infrequent audits of his institution was unfair to a hospital administration charged with the responsibility of spending $300,000 of State funds each year.

Dr. G. B. Arnold, head of the State colony for the epileptic and feeble-minded at Lynchburg since 1933, said that no audit of his records had been made since he was placed in charge and he had been given to understand that none had been made since 1930.

The board chairman, Senator Morton Goode, of Dinwiddie, straightway requested Dr. Hugh C. Henry, State hospitals director, to bring the matter to the attention of the State auditor of public accounts.
